Solve world problems? Yea very unlikely, I know you're hypothetically speaking here, but yea.. No matter what there will ALWAYS be world problems sadly..

However, I'd use it to help other countries, such as poor ones and stuff but there will still be problems.

Is IQ all that though? Anyways, I'd like to do some good for the world in some way with my intelligence, however, I don't know if I would come right away...wouldn't want everyone all over me right away.

Shot Caller - January 25, 2017, 10:23 am

With such amount of IQ you would be able to do things with your mind that no one else could comprehend right now, for example it may be possible to know which number a roulette ball is going to land on, which card is on the top of a deck without seeing it etc.

Interesting question because there are so many directions this can go to.

I would put myself in isolation for a bit. The less people who know about you, the better. The last thing you want is the feds to be knocking on your door.

I would look at the world in a spectrum and decide from there.

People talk about how you would use your brain in changing the world, but would you?

Having a high IQ is pointless if you don't learn things and put it into use. Its not like you automatically know everything. Like everyone, you'll have to learn your ABCs

That high of an IQ allows you to learn extremely easily. In fact, you would most likely be many years ahead of any peers. You'd have your PHD in your 20s, or at least a Master's or two in the early 20s. You'd be able to comprehend new information so quickly, solve complicated problems, and consider a lot of different variables at once. A genius level IQ, or even gifted (130ish and up) IQ enables the person to think in a way that is far above others. A 700 IQ would allow a person to outsmart the world's greatest thinkers, easily. If someone gave Trump a 700 IQ we would probably have an extremely different President, for the better.

I know this but what I'm saying is that that person on HF would have to get their butt off the couch and pick up a book. Yes, it would definitely be easier but they still have to put time into learning.

Also for the record, they would have their PHD within their teenage years. I know people who've gotten BA degrees by the time they are 20 and their IQ isn't even "close" to being 1/3 of an IQ of 700. Just saying

With a 700 IQ they would most likely never have a laziness issue.

As IQ goes up, it gets harder to make decisions that negatively impact your life. Of course, this isn't a guarantee, but someone with a 700 IQ would most likely neither enjoy or benefit from HF. Money wouldn't be an issue for them, and modern day entertainment would be so slow paced that it would be boring. I really doubt someone with a 700 IQ would ever consider wasting hours on their couch.

(Jan 28, 2017 01:36 PM)LotusHF Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) It would be pretty hard to relate to "normal" people, and I would probably end up as a depressed recluse.

This is very relatable. I am not a genius, but have an IQ of just under 140. My father is over 150. I've found it extremely difficult, due to the amount of time I spent with my dad as a kid, to truly appreciate my time with people who are of lower intelligence. Sure, I have funtimes, but it's extremely difficult to put up with people that don't understand a lot of "common sense" concepts that I embrace. It's like debating that the world isn't flat - it gets tiring when people refuse to believe you because they haven't put in the research and time to understand the conversation.

So yeah, if I had a 700 IQ I would most likely hate a lot more people than I already do.

I'd definitely be the leader of the free world & of course, much much more.

As IQ goes up, it gets harder to make decisions that negatively impact your life. Of course, this isn't a guarantee, but someone with a 700 IQ would most likely neither enjoy or benefit from HF. Money wouldn't be an issue for them, and modern day entertainment would be so slow paced that it would be boring. I really doubt someone with a 700 IQ would ever consider wasting hours on their couch.

This is very relatable. I am not a genius, but have an IQ of just under 140. My father is over 150. I've found it extremely difficult, due to the amount of time I spent with my dad as a id, to truly appreciate my time with people who are of lower intelligence. Sure, I have funtimes, but it's extremely difficult to put up with people that don't understand a lot of "common sense" concepts that I embrace. It's like debating that the world isn't flat - it gets tiring when people refuse to believe you because they haven't put in the research and time to understand the conversation.

So yeah, if I had a 700 IQ I would most likely hate a lot more people than I already do.

I agree so much with this

But then again, you can have a high IQ and not use it

You would most likely commit suicide if you had that high of a IQ because of so many stupid people

7tyler - January 30, 2017, 12:09 am

I would post about it on facebook.

?Creation - January 30, 2017, 2:05 am

If your IQ is this high, you would get depressed. Everyone around you is stupid af and its to hard for you to explain stuff to people or people to you. You will probably get crazy, want to kill yourself or live somewhere alone all your life underground. And making money? I don't think you would give a lot of shit about money if u were this smart.

*But I would probably do something with space, trying to create something that we can go faster, safer and cheaper trough space.

Science, something that would change the world.

K l a u s - January 30, 2017, 4:01 am

I would probably devote my life to simplifying the things I can understand so everybody else can.

Even though it may take several books and years of studies, as long as the intelligence doesn't go to waste.

I would probably end up lonely, but that's not too much of an issue to me.

Online tests aren't accurate bud.

People with 140 IQ's don't ask questions like this: hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5530340 You categorize all non members as nuisances, lol! I love it.

Not only that, you're clearly not equipped with the problem solving skillset to figure out how to execute your demand.. regardless I'd say your IQ is less than 105.

You and your father need to show me what online IQ test you guys took, because you're both delusional.

You'd most likely be highly autistic, and if you somehow were still able to feel any form of emotions, you'd feel so lonely that you'd probably kill yourself.

In other words, not a fun time

Having a high IQ relationship doesn't necessarily mean you'll be some type of autistic savant mate. It's probable but doesn't increase or lower the chances.

If you have an IQ of close to 140, you are by definition a "genius" (although we no longer classify people based on their IQ with such terms).

If we assume that a high IQ level equals to superior intelligence, and we also assume that people with a high level of intelligence are at a higher risk of suicide, then yes, they most certainly have an increased risk of taking their own life.

Now, this is of course a purely hypothetical scenario, seeing as:

1. 100 is the average on an IQ scale (thus, above or below average).
2. Seeing as we do not count IQ levels above 140, and we have yet to find a single person who would even in a hypothetical scenario have an IQ of above 200, the whole idea of a 700 IQ is bizarre, seeing as we wouldn't have someone able to measure such a high level, since no one would really understand what the creature was doing/saying. (That is, assuming that it is made of material matter to being with.)

I'd probably keep to myself if I was that smart. Maybe help some people and have fun with experiments. Create things and find ways to make things better. Thing is though I already feel isolated with the things I know so... it would potentially get worse if I was that smart... or to counter isolation I'd improve social skills to adapt. I don't really think people really understand how people truly are but there is lots of elements to consider with that. I think if I was that smart... would I still encounter challenges with things? The challenge in learning or doing something makes learning something fun for me... so if you take out the challenge then I could get bored... maybe I'd resort to pranks? I don't think I'd turn cruel either... but with intelligence like that... I'dk if I'd think anything would matter... so it would resort to personal needs... so I'd probably have lots of money, have two gfs and spoil them rotten while making memories together with them... at least that would be my ideal way of using that kind of knowledge.

Not tell anyone. Act dumb. Assimilate with the non-intellectuals. Nothing is cooler than having an IQ of 700 and not a single person knowing.

--EDIT--

Learning to work with dumb people when you're that smart is extremely important. I have trouble communicating with people myself sometimes, and I'm definitely not the most intelligent person I know.
