Thread: Nulled.Systems - Malware research board

Pharmacist - January 29, 2017, 4:19 am

Hey, how's it going?

We just opened up our new forum, <https://nulled.systems/>

Our focus is a development/malware research forum.

We do not have a hacking section as our site is not for hacking, rather for research on malware, viruses, worms, exploits, etc..

Here's an image of our portal:

The idea or the theme is really interesting and the theme fits the purpose. Good luck with the community!

Maybe change the background as I've seen it 100's of times already.

It might also be interesting to first put a few subforums together, like the coding forums which can simply be 1 subforum.

Thanks for the feedback!

We may change the background in that case, currently myself and two others are running the site, I'm mainly in charge of distribution and content. We then have someone who handles the server and security, and another that deals with form bugs and design, so he'll be the one I need to talk to about the background.

I really like the logo btw. It reminds me a lot of the "retro" feel I also get over at <http://www.pouet.net/> (everytime you press F5 it changes). For some reason it feels the same.

Anyways, good luck. It's an interesting idea. Please don't start focusing on a marketplace lol. The designer did a hell of a job on the logo :) He's going to read this and make his day. Thanks again for the feedback!! ?

Why should I as a user switch from something such as kernelmode to nulled.systems?

We're not asking anyone to switch from one forum to ours.

Our goal isn't to compete with other boards, nor for anyone to prefer our board over another. We want to provide a stable, active & friendly community for people to discuss malware, computing, and anything related, although we do focus on malware above others. We are currently setup in an environment where we can get fresh malware samples that haven't been distributed throughout the internet, and with that we have created a board for our own detailed reports and analyst's of the samples we get, and the ability for others to do the same.

Personally I don't like the theme, I think is to much "clean" you have to much few posts.. You should increase that, because it will give a better impression from your forum activity and more users will register on your forum.

But I like the kinda of content do you will put on forum! :)
