Thread: Ugh local business suck for security.

Mr. Robot - February 1, 2017, 6:10 pm

Literally used this today to show a cash loan place their customers are at risk.

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5531642>

They hadn't closed their browsers after letting hundreds of customers that week use the computers to login to their banks and print off a document of their income. They paid me nothing so I am going to hack their WiFi and print some shit on their network printer.

I think it's disgusting security even though they have blocked all their USB ports off except one they will still plug customers phones in to charge and USBs to format them, yet on phones and USBs you are able to exploit payloads using keyboard emulation.

Not only that, their network is vulnerable to man in the middle attacks and they often connect customers phones to the network after clearing them so if you buy a device, it already has their WiFi password stored.

I don't understand why they wont pay me for trying to help them - but I guess they would rather do this the hard way.

I'm just out here tryna hustle a buck y'know.

Yeah you know whats up. Fuck'n useless cunts.

Korvo - February 1, 2017, 6:21 pm

Well damn. I mean it's really sad a company that is handling money on that level has such horrible security. Very interesting that you came across this though. I hope that they open their eyes and pay you for trying to save their asses from potentially losing a lot of money.

Very interesting read as always.

It happens quite often. I lived next to a bank for maybe 4 or 5 months about 2 years ago and often went over there and the guy was quite nice and paid, same with food places like mcdonalds and shit - they'll pay especially local ones that don't want to report back to the head office.

Knucklez. - February 1, 2017, 6:24 pm

Did you show the owner or ?

Ni??c??k - February 1, 2017, 6:25 pm

You expose their shitty security system and they don't even pay you? Man that feeling must suck.

In what cases will you find a company who lets customers use computers that don't allow the browsers to close but allow you to open Task Manager and create a dump file?

This particular one was a pawn shop that lends money too

And yes they allow the browser to close, these are the ones on their counter for organizing sales/payments - they make customers login to their banks to print off last 60 days.

Might try to make money off of this at my HS. Not ransom style, but like straight up go to our (shit) IT department and tell them I have a method of sorts to get passwords. Thanks OP (Mr. Robot)

Plenty of ways to pentest highschools mate, explore your options and have a full understanding of their network setup before you go in.

Thanks for the advice, my high school IT department troubleshoots simple computer problems by pulling out this big fancy charts and shit to assess the issue when it's as simple as searching an error code online, so I'll definitely be able to teach them a thing or two. You recommend for pentesting that I use Kali Linux on a laptop, or any other specific setups?

Unfortunately unless you want to argue or have some kid come up to you later and say "why are you using Kali you fucking noob" - I would recommend using something like lionsec or something else entirely with the tools on it, or make it look as far off from Kali as possible by replacing the boot screen and wallpaper.

It sucks but unless you want to get into a whole argument about how the tools are all compiled there for a reason, denying it's wealth of knowledge would be more of a skid thing to do.

It's a franchise yes and I would take it higher up considering how at risk people are for using their network/computer in the first place but instead I will just fuck with them.
