Thread: Learn How I Went From Managing \$10 Companies >>> \$1m Companies ALL UNDER 22 YEARS OLD

Eagerkid - February 3, 2017, 1:07 pm

And So Can You

And So Can You is a inspirational autobiography about my business career and how I went from managing $10 gaming studios to eventually managing a $1m gaming company. This book contains around 20k words and will be beneficial for anyone in the business field, or people interested in the business field.

Introductory Paragraph

Spoiler (Click to View)

* Please note this is only the Intro to the book, please take a look at the chapters to see more topics in the book.

Code Let's face the truth, none of you reading this book will be the next Bill Gates. Not that you can't make a software company. It's the simple fact the time has changed, and you won't be able to create the same innovative personal computer and software that he brought into the world. If you do indeed make a company around operating systems or computers, you might be somewhat successful but you are not an innovator. You are someone who is copying and creating the same exact product, so in fact there will not be another Bill Gates because the time has passed and no one can bring the same product back to the market in a way that will affect society like he did. Whenever you are managing a company or working on something you need to think of new ways to connect people and how to change the product completely to satisfy the ever changing market. If we are going to keep advancing as a society we need to start moving diagonal not forward. Moving forward is just changing different parts of a product but does actually change the value of it. Let's take a car for example, they are very useful and millions of Americans depend on them in their daily lives. When Henry Ford created the model T in 1914 he introduced a moving vehicle to the automotive market. This would be an example of starting a new graph and being the plot (0, 0). Now if you look at the newer models you see the same thing, nothing has changed in advancing the technology, it has only moved the original (0, 0) plot across the "x". So it is at (0, 103) because every year it simply moves down the line but doesn't bring anything new to the market only simply improves the previous faults. This is not innovation; this is simply copying Henry Ford's model T idea, and not globalizing the simple fact that it's just a car. However, in recent years Telsa has come in to change the game. Tesla is changing the old Model T and creating a totally different product thus bringing the automotive industry adjacent and moving into the "y" axes. No one will ever again jump into the car industry like Henry Ford did, because the market is already dead just like the operating system that Bill Gates created. When you are creating a product to bring to the market, think about this. Simply creating another fast food joint is not good enough anymore, you need to figure out a way to do something different if you want to make an evolving product that will change the world. A common question that is often asked, what company introduces something unfamiliar to a market that has not been explored before? What value can you bring to a market that is unique and is something that the world doesn't already know how to create/build. Before we get any farther I want to stop you if you think I am going to teach you the "secrete method" of success. I wish I could, but no one can teach you this because it doesn't exist. You cannot teach someone innovation or in other words teaching someone about something that hasn't even existed yet. Moving forward, I am sure you have some questions about the previous statements of the plots and hopefully I can explain it here. You can be a successful business doing similar things and not hold much value, as used above in the Ford example. Creating a new fast food restaurant could be profitable, but it doesn't hold value. If a business is valuable it is going to stand out in the market, because it did the impossible and ventured into a new market and is the dominating company. Look at Facebook for example, it has over a billion users and is the largest social networking site generating billions of dollars each year. It owns the largest percent in the market, and is a leading company in news media. Facebook has value because other competitors cannot even compete with it. These sorts of companies are Monopolies, not in the government sense when the bigger companies jack up prices but in the sense that they are giants in the market. The great advantages of these companies are that they don't need to be money hungry like the rest of the companies in the world. They have all the customers because they made something unique from everyone and so they can focus on something other than money. Money is either a reward or it is something you cannot stop thinking about. Smaller companies need to make as much as they can because they have so much competition and they go into a saturated market. This is why companies like Facebook and Google are good companies to work for, and have unique business expense like doing your laundry. They can afford to take their mind off money and instead think about abstract things. Big startup companies are started each day and they aim to path the future, And So Can You. Chapters

If you manage such a profitable company, then isn't $20 chump change? You really should at least give an except so we can see the quality of the writing and if its something that is worth the time to read.

Anyway the max I would pay for this is $5 anyway, its not like you are a New York Time's best selling author lmao.

Are you a retard? You are right $20 is not a lot, but in quantity it is. Bill gates has a book he sells for near $20, are you saying he didn't found Microsoft because of it? I sold, pre-orders and will wait for them to comment I am not giving away anything for free. The problem with kids now a days is they think they can just find everything for free without paying a dime and it is ridiculous. If you dont want to read the book dont buy it simple, I am not going to die if you dont.

mvmt - February 5, 2017, 9:15 am

What do you consider "managing" these companies, like you owned them or were just an employee?

I'd also talk about roughly how much you make as that will entice others to buy this, as of now you don't have any validity if you don't back up your claims.

Not trying to bash you, just giving you constructive criticism that would help increase your sales.

The latter half was a bit silly but the first, I don't think so.

Can you explain a bit more about these $10 companies, I'm sure it's just marketing jargon but would be interested in a bit of a definition.

They only had small advertising budgets, they had just started up... what?

I totally agree which is why I didnt answer, but I will since you have a brain. Okay $10 companies are gaming studios that literally made $10. Does that mean I made $10? Absolutely not. I manage gaming studios so I run the daily operations, accounting, financing, marketing, advertising etc. Normally I take a small percentage of the studio to do this sort of work, and considering the game engine website doesn't have a lot of people (none that I have seen) that advertise business management I am able to scoop a lot of the competition. The smaller games are all normally mobile, but I have worked on many RPG games and MMORPG games that simply dont make money because they dont have a budget. Most of the time in the video game industry you will see 1 or 2 developer teams for these amazing projects but the people have second jobs and dont put any money into the project just their time. So the project ends up failing because it doesn't matter how well your game is, if no one sees it you will not succeed. I am sure you want me to talk about the million dollar company now, when someone says they manage a million dollar company does that mean it made $1 million in 2016? No. That's an evaluation which for time sake I will say is 3X the yearly revenue. Which is a bare simple calculation. I did not make $1m from this gaming studio. I work for it. I didn't expect a lot of people to bash me on this and ask so many questions about the video game (not saying you) because this is more of a business motivational guide. I don't give away million dollar secrets and pictures of the revenues in the book because that is not what it is about. If you read the chapters you will see a few about my career and then the rest are business knowledge heavy. I wrote this to try and inspire some people from HF to do great things, and I have only received some hate from 12 year old kids that I am trying to relate too considering I was around that age when I worked on my first video game (which I coded)

Managing a million dollar gaming studio doesnt mean I made a million dollars, and the book is not to make someone a millionaire. If it were that easy and if their was a formula to make a million dollars everyone would be rich. You can not teach innovation because you can not teach something that has not already happened

Extra instinctive to buy it, if you dont believe me then dont buy it pretty simple. HF is obviously one of the worst marketplaces to sell something like this because it is not a get rich scheme and kids dont like to work for things anymore which is a huge problem in today's society. Kids wants things for free, and even when they are being offered a TON of valuable information for cheap they still wont buy it. This book is to help inspire young people and maybe interest them in a field that I was successful in. Most people who read this wont make any money off it, because you need to be motivated and you need to be smart. That being said, I am not dying to sell copies on HF because this is simply not the area to do it. I have sold copies outside of HF and will continue to do so, and so I will not be giving any information about the book for free. If the introductory paragraph doesn't make you want to buy the book and read it, then simply move on. This is not the best business book in the world, but it has its incentives as you are able to skype chat me and the author can answer questions.

Most people on HF will say they dont need this because they already make millions, and that is fine. I still think it will be a good read, because if it doesn't teach you anything which I am 100% it will. You will get the fun experience of learning about someone else life which I think is interesting at least for me.

I noticed some of you threads contains adfly just do make a few cents on our clicks, if you run a successful company why would you care about cents? I am a bit skeptical about this as it may be a legit book I have no clue, however the thread is put nothing into, it just seems low quality just to make a few dollars on hf

I use it to keep traffic, I havent actually made any money on the adfly links. But thank you for pointing that out

That makes 0 sense

Are you a retard? You are right $20 is not a lot, but in quantity it is. Bill gates has a book he sells for near $20, are you saying he didn't found Microsoft because of it? I sold, pre-orders and will wait for them to comment I am not giving away anything for free. The problem with kids now a days is they think they can just find everything for free without paying a dime and it is ridiculous. If you dont want to read the book dont buy it simple, I am not going to die if you dont.

The proof being in your product doesn't exactly help show potential customers the proof. I certainly do not want to buy until I see the proof that you are, in fact, managing a $1m company before I even consider purchasing.

Not trying to sales trash, just giving my 2 cents.

Looks cool! It still works?

I understand where you are coming from, thank you for commenting. I am not going to show proof however, if people are really interested in purchasing they will simply just purchase. I am not tailoring the book to everyone needs. The book will not make you or anyone a businessman, it is quite literally a book and that is it. So if you really need proof of me running the company then you are buying the book for the wrong reasons. While reading the book you will gain a lot of knowledge in business as well as learning how I went about things in my early business stages. If you have any general questions you can simply send me a PM and I would love to help.
