Thread: [\[FREE\] Becoming No One | Online security and anonymity](#)

JELLY?IsH - February 9, 2017, 10:46 am

Dear HF users, few days ago I started writing this Ebook about online security and anonymity. Now, when it's finished, I decided to share it with all of you for FREE. Perhaps eventually I add few more details to the book, but don't worry you'll get notified.

ABOUT BOOK: It's all about staying safe and anonymous online. I made it to be understandable for beginners and interesting for advanced users. You can learn a lot about various techniques of staying anonymous. Whether you are an ordinary user or black hat hacker, this might help you. Read about VPNs, TOR, Opsec, browsers, different kinds of useful software, Linux, Virtual machines, IP, DNS and much more.

if he rats or infects anyone its a lose lose situation. he gets closed and can't come back

JELLY?IsH - February 10, 2017, 2:18 am

UPDATE: Added Virustotal scan of the Ebook as user wanted.

It's okay for beginners I guess, I'd suggest adding double encryption or whatever it's called on the encrypting part. Where you can have an encrypted folder and one password reveals random shit (porn ect) stuff that would seem "illegal" and another password that's only in your head (long one at that) that has your things you want to hide, and I'd also add that you should store all your VM files in that encrypted drive (the one with the password in your head). For people that don't know this is so that if your required to give LE your password, you can give them the fake one and most of the time they'll be satisfied. Also using a VPN provider that's based in the US and or using US servers (even if the provider ISN'T based in the US) Isn't a good idea. Even if the VPN provider doesn't keep logs, if the government is investigating you they can request the provider to do pretty much anything, keep logs, track what your doing, request to see how you pay for the service (that's why people say to pay with BTC). Even BTC isn't safe, they can track who sent the original payment (even if tumbled ;))
