Thread: Did you ever use the "feather/fletching" method?

Nerdi - February 19, 2017, 7:31 am

It was more popular back in 2003-2007, but it was very profitable. There was a Runescape millions guide being sold for $3 online, and it was widely advertised. My brother purchased it. The guide instructs you to basically buy feathers on free worlds and sell them on members worlds. My brother and I used to hire new/free players to get feathers from the chickens up the street from Lumbridge. We'd buy them for 1gp each and sell for 5-10gp each. Very good money back in the day!

Did you ever do this?

Nah don't remember this, but I never had members for my first couple years playing back in the day. Remember law running worlds where you would go edgeville with a inv of runeess and run over to law altar and trade a guy with monk robes who would convert for an inv of law runes.

I made so much gold with the essence and making runes. My biggest source of gold though was mining and woodcutting (skills wise), and then I made a lot from buying low and reselling. Also, PKing obviously can be nice. I was in the Mayhem Makers clan for a while.

Pink hats, yes? I had a shitty pure account a REAL long time ago and remember pking with them, soon after portals were introduced(2006ish?) and there was intel a clan was porting on our world, this clan ports in lv150 wild all together and get completely destroyed with a mass of ancient spells.

Shit was cash.

One of the many great memories I have of the game. Can't bring myself to play it nowadays sadly but in it's time it was one of a kind imo.

Yea exactly!

The pink hats / uniform was very cool. I loved that aspect.

I wish guilds in WoW had more pride like that.

The MM clan was glorious.
