Thread: ~ Superman, Spiderman, Batman - superheroes or misleading idols?

Parents Should Be Real Superheroes Comic books are just that--fantasy stories made up for entertainment. Real superheroes should be everyday parents who try their hardest to make life better for their children. I'm not talking about deadbeats who skimp out on paying child support or meth-heads who can't get over their drug-induced haze. I mean real parents who love, educate and prepare the next generation to take over the world.

So yes they are misleading idols. Brainwashing kids into thinking superheroes only fight crime. In the real world the superheroes are your everyday parents, police officers, fire fighters, doctors, nurses, and so on.

This thread is pointless because once kids grow up they realize superheroes aren't real and they realize who the real heroes of the world are. Pretty sure 95% of us here idolized superheroes and now realize they're not real, as will today's kids and the kids after that.

The only hero the world needs is this man.
