

Forum: Hack Forums

Thread: Can you sell stock analysis?

The Order - March 20, 2017, 6:35 pm

I am pretty good at picking stock but there isn't that much cash in my trading account. Just because I am new at it. I have had it for only half a year. I am good at picking stocks I haven't had a losing trade yet. If I had more cash I could make a killing. Is there a way I could sell my analysis? To trading firms or any interested party?

Thanks

Truth - March 20, 2017, 6:39 pm

Those who cant do teach.

As far as selling tho, I can sell ice to an Eskimo. So I could. Not sure about you tho

Trappy - March 20, 2017, 6:41 pm

Do you mean can you sell it on hackforums?

aRuHZoNa - March 20, 2017, 6:44 pm

So if you had money you'd be making a killing at investing. But you've also been investing for half a year with no losing stocks. But you have no money? Doesn't make sense.

And relating to your question. No, investing firms would rather pick somebody with actual experience and credentials (degree, work experience, etc.) than somebody random.

thales - March 20, 2017, 6:46 pm

You can do some yes.

However you may need a series 6, 7, and/or 53 license depending how you do it.

Reporter - March 20, 2017, 6:47 pm

(Mar 20, 2017 06:35 PM)The Order Wrote: CITE I am pretty good at picking stock but there isn't that much cash in my trading account. Just because I am new at it. I have had it for only half a year. I am good at picking stocks I haven't had a losing trade yet. If I had more cash I could make a killing. Is there a way I could sell my analysis? To trading firms or any interested party?

Thanks

You can sell anything as long as you got a pitch for it to attract people.

The Order - March 20, 2017, 9:08 pm

[quote='aRuHZoNa' pid='54391789' dateline='1490060678']

So if you had money you'd be making a killing at investing. But you've also been investing for half a year with no losing stocks. But you have no money? Doesn't make sense.

I have a small portfolio with 6k. I should have mentioned that my bad.

I think some of you who have responded know little about investing. Unless you have 10k in your account or are brave enough too use leverage your not going to get much.

[???] - March 21, 2017, 7:56 am

Without any reputable testimonies, it'll be hard not to seem like a scam if you're just naming companies out of the blue. If you actually do research however and can compose a report of sorts, you might have more luck. Still would be tricky though. You might want to start a blog for free and work of ad revenue until you make a name for yourself

The Order - March 21, 2017, 12:11 pm

(Mar 21, 2017 07:56 AM)[??] Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Without any reputable testimonies, it'll be hard not to seem like a scam if you're just naming companies out of the blue. If you actually do research however and can compose a report of sorts, you might have more luck. Still would be tricky though. You might want to start a blog for free and work of ad revenue until you make a name for yourself Interesting idea... That would be like giving away my hard research away for free though. I brought the stock I researched obviously so I have the research and proof that it is preforming.

[???] - March 21, 2017, 2:50 pm

(Mar 21, 2017 12:11 PM)The Order Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Interesting idea... That would be like giving away my hard research away for free though. I brought the stock I researched obviously so I have the research and proof that it is preforming.

Without a reputation though, it'd be hard to establish trust.

For example, there's this scam:

- Message 1000 people: tell 500 to buy ABC tell 500 to short ABC
- Keep the group that was correct, ignore the group that was wrong
- Tell 250 within that group to buy DEF, tell 250 to short DEF
- Keep repeating this until you have a small group of people who think you've correctly predicted like ten different stock movements. Now that these people "trust" you, convince them to make a deposit, etc. etc.

If you want, PM me a copy of your research from a previous position you've taken and I can give you my opinion on whether or not it has actual value

The Order - March 21, 2017, 3:24 pm

I invested in RDS Class A and LLoy Lloyds banking group in the last 6-8 months. Both have played out. So no need for a PM.

Visualize - March 21, 2017, 7:06 pm

You can try getting a job, although you really have a poor sample size and evidence you would be worthy.

The Order - March 21, 2017, 8:21 pm

(Mar 21, 2017 07:06 PM)Visualize Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) You can try getting a job, although you really have a poor sample size and evidence you would be worthy.

That's the nicest thing any one has said too me all day. Thank you. I have tried in the past but guys with bachelor degrees fresh out of university go for those jobs. It is hard to compete. I could try again...

Good suggestion thank you.

Visualize - March 21, 2017, 9:07 pm

(Mar 21, 2017 08:21 PM)The Order Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) That's the nicest thing any one has said too me all day. Thank you. I have tried in the past but guys with bachelor degrees fresh out of university go for those jobs. It is hard to compete. I could try again...

Good suggestion thank you.

I mean the way I see it that's your two options in the investing world

1) Use your own advice and try to build your own portfolio. You could go far if you are committed and constantly keep reading literature. Maybe right now you don't have the cash you just simulate realistic investments for a year, and then put aside money from working that year to money you can actually use for investing in the future. The reason why I don't necessarily see viability in selling stock advice is because you have no legitimate credibility. 6 months in the game is far too soon to be able to be worthy to be selling picks imo, but I mean if you are crafty you could try to make one of those Internet Marketing ads to try to promote yourself. Keep in mind you are competing against others who are better than you and are already established, so it's a tough road and I really wouldn't suggest doing it.

2) Getting a job that involves stock investing. Less risk because you actually aren't staking money, but doing what you wanted to do in the first place, get paid for your analysis. This is realistically the better way, but the entrance to be getting a job in this field is also pretty difficult because you are competing against people with a degree which make them more desirable. But I guess if there's a will then there is a way, but you need to start building connections with people working in the field which can help you get a referral to land a job.

Both ways are tricky, but if you are actually serious about this then you can find your place somewhere

The Order - March 22, 2017, 12:14 am

(Mar 21, 2017 09:07 PM)Visualize Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I mean the way I see it that's your two options in the investing world

1) Use your own advice and try to build your own portfolio. You could go far if you are committed and constantly keep reading literature. Maybe right now you don't have the cash you just simulate realistic investments for a year, and then put aside money from working that year to money you can actually use for investing in the future. The reason why I don't necessarily see viability in selling stock advice is because you have no legitimate credibility. 6 months in the game is far too soon to be able to be worthy to be selling picks imo, but I mean if you are crafty you could try to make one of those Internet Marketing ads to try to promote yourself. Keep in mind you are competing against others who are better than you and are already established, so it's a tough road and I really wouldn't suggest doing it.

2) Getting a job that involves stock investing. Less risk because you actually aren't staking money, but doing what you wanted to do in the first place, get paid for your analysis. This is realistically the better way, but the entrance to be getting a job in this field is also pretty difficult because you are competing against people with a degree which make them more desirable. But I guess if there's a will then there is a way, but you need to start building connections with people working in the field which can help you get a referral to land a job.

Both ways are tricky, but if you are actually serious about this then you can find your place somewhere

You have given me some interesting ideas thank you... I will consider them seriously. The game of money is a complex enigma.

@Kevin - March 22, 2017, 12:16 am

Why sell stocks when you can just create a signals service and guide people with the help of your aff ID.

King of Clubs - March 22, 2017, 12:20 am

Life has taught me that you can sell anything if you make it convincing enough. People will ALWAYS buy if they are convinced it's good enough for them.

The Order - March 22, 2017, 11:59 am

(Mar 22, 2017 12:16 AM)KING Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Why sell stocks when you can just create a signals service and guide people with the help of your aff ID.

Hmmm There are already so many of those out there. I am pretty sure you need a licence to give investing advice as well in my country.

Maybe there is some way around that...

ohxerxe - March 22, 2017, 12:02 pm

Highly doubt you have never had a losing trade. With that being said maybe find a way to show off your skill to an investor and see if they would fund you to invest for them. Although this is most likely not going to happen. Also there are already so many teachers out there it could be hard to get into successfully.

The Order - March 22, 2017, 5:20 pm

(Mar 22, 2017 12:02 PM)ohxerxe Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Highly doubt you have never had a losing trade. With that being said maybe find a way to show off your skill to an investor and see if they would fund you to invest for them. Although this is most likely not going to happen. Also there are already so many teachers out there it could be hard to get into successfully.

I haven't had a losing trade but saying that I am new too the game.

Toby Flenderson - March 22, 2017, 5:25 pm

TLDR; user is Timothy Sykes

Ben Affleck - March 22, 2017, 7:50 pm

I've seen some people on fiverr sell stock advice.

The Order - March 23, 2017, 12:07 am

(Mar 22, 2017 07:50 PM)Costello Falcone Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I've seen some people on fiverr sell stock advice.

lols

(Mar 22, 2017 05:25 PM)Toby Flenderson Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) TLDR; user is Timothy Sykes
What...?

Ben Affleck - March 23, 2017, 1:30 am

(Mar 23, 2017 12:07 AM)The Order Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) lols

What...?

Just google Tim Sykes or check his instagram.

BTNH - April 7, 2017, 12:58 pm

(Mar 22, 2017 05:20 PM)The Order Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) I haven't had a losing trade but saying that I am new too the game.

Until you have some consistent analysis that backs your trades, I would not feel too confident about the trades that were successful. PM me if you are interested in other forms of trading in the financial markets, though, as you can never have too many trading contacts (IMO).

The Order - April 7, 2017, 2:15 pm

(Apr 7, 2017 12:58 PM)BTNH Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Until you have some consistent analysis that backs your trades, I would not feel too confident about the trades that were successful. PM me if you are interested in other forms of trading in the financial markets, though, as you can never have too many trading contacts (IMO).

Thanks. I will add you.

investmentanalyst - April 7, 2017, 6:54 pm

The order, want to know what comes after a nice winning streak? a monstrous losing streak that will most of the time wipe your account out.

You're not some stock picking god, you will face many losses. What you do when those losses come is what will determine if you're meant for this world.