

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: subsection just for Cisco

Resilience - March 25, 2017, 8:10 am

Do you think we should have a subsection only for Cisco certifications, questions, etc ?

M?xim - March 25, 2017, 10:22 am

A computer science section would be better. But pretty much what Adam said.

Omniscient - March 25, 2017, 10:36 am

Where are the existing threads?

Fluxify - March 25, 2017, 10:47 am

This is barely any activity in the networking section, so I don't think it's active enough to have a separate subsection.

M?xim - March 25, 2017, 10:49 am

(Mar 25, 2017 10:47 AM)Fluxify Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) This is barely any activity in the networking section, so I don't think it's active enough to have a separate subsection.

Wouldn't say barely.

Aqua_fina - March 25, 2017, 12:24 pm

Omni has a good point. For a section/subsection to be created, it has to be demanded. The worst thing you can have in a forum is dead sections, that just makes the forum look very bad.

Egregious Jr. - March 25, 2017, 1:12 pm

Doesn't have nearly enough activity to warrant a section.

Mad76e - March 25, 2017, 1:24 pm

The Idea is intresting tho, i mean to have ONE section for various types of certificates, qrestions and such, but sadly 99% of those who use this forum would not have the actual cash to pay for one to start with.

I dont know any CCNA or CCDP certificates below $250! same goes for CompTIA, my last one went over $310

And dont forget about Microsofts MCSA, MCSE, MCSD.. You need a very fat wallet here as well.. However an MCP might be a easier way

CEH are also expensive as hell likewise OSCP or simular (sorry skids, Nothing is free)

Perhaps MCT... Anyhow.. Thats my 5 cents

EDIT:

However <https://www.cybrary.it/> does offer free training for those who are intrested to learn without buying any expensive certifications. (however the quality on the courses might vary) They do offer a kind of "certificate" for their courses" for a very very low price, but how that holds up in the real world I dont know

Vitani - March 27, 2017, 3:37 am

I would love a section dedicated to Cisco but there is just not enough activity at this time to warrant a subforum dedicated to it.

Let's first get the networking section active again, before we start thinking about subforums in this section. My networking guide is on it's way for those interested.