Im planning on doing this but I've seen many people selling gift cards what will result in your Amazon account being closed or revoked. Are we allowed to sell Amazon gift cards that will get revoked and result in your account being closed with a disclaimer? Im just curious. Suppose it is not carded but you just ripped off a e-whore buyer and they decide to call there bank or amazon.

Of course the buyer will have time to buy the items they want before the cancellation hits. Would this be allowed? And no im not planning to do this, just seen others n i was wondering

As Omniscient said it:

Quote:I realize that Gift Cards are often a means of valid financial transactions between members. So I'm going to allow them. VCC and VBA are still very much disallowed but sellers are now free to accept Amazon Gift Cards as payment as an example. This should open up some additional Marketplace activity.

Please be aware that Gift Card trading and sales are still very high risk methods for being scammed. I advise severe caution in dealing with them.

I think this will answer your question.

No im trying to say these are valid and non carded gift cards but how you are obtaining them. You decide to rip someone off so you think they will most likely call there bank or amazon to dispute the charges. You put a disclaimer when selling the amazon gift cards saying theres a high chance of them being revoked
