Thread: Should I learn French? \(Help me @French speakers\)

LuvXo72 - April 2, 2017, 2:35 pm

So to put it simple I already know two languages (English, Arabic) But i've been in Spanish for 2 years buuuut it's just not interesting to me as in i'm not really gonna ever visit South America unless there's another world cup there and countries I want to spend a lot of time in would be North Africa, France and Switzerland.

Should I continue with Spanish? (Btw I'm shit at it)

How long to learn French?

Will it be hard or easy?

ilikecheese - April 2, 2017, 2:42 pm

I am starting to learn French in the next year. I simply love the language.

It's completely up to you, I'd drop Spanish if it isn't going to be useful and learn French if you want to spend a lot of time in France. Plus French people are often better looking than other people so there's a bonus to learning French.

a lot of people in Spain are better looking than people in France TBH as a French speaker myself, knowing the language is good I guess? countries that you will benefit in money wise are France, Belgium, Canada (probably more on that list) for socializing French can help in any country, girls would prob like a guy fluent in two languages (does not have to be French)

learning a new language can be difficult but you will find that French and Spanish have a similar language, similar words

Oui, French is honestly a great language to learn. I love being able to speak it. I'm still not the best cause I've only taken my 2 years of high school French class, then a small bit after. I suggest it to be honest.

For what you want to learn French ? ^^

Sick Info - April 2, 2017, 2:54 pm

Should definitely learn French. I know I want to

BR?ND?N - April 2, 2017, 2:56 pm

French is a great language. And is also very romantic ;)

Breakbot - April 2, 2017, 2:56 pm

if it's for business then no .. focus on another language that's more world-widely spoken ...

if it's just because you want to learn it, then yeah sure :) it's a nice language to learn

i'm from North Africa (Morocco) most of people's speak French ... and i'm actually living in Paris so yeah def you gonna need it !

I think you have to start by learning to suck a fart out someone's ass first

Cr1p - April 2, 2017, 3:45 pm

I've been taking French for a year and a half now. I think its a decent language, if you have the desire to learn it, then do so.

SSH - April 2, 2017, 4:45 pm

Learning different languages are good, because your knowledge can never be taken from you. Even If you're poor and broke, that knowledge Is still there.

KingOfSleeping - April 2, 2017, 5:09 pm

I'm taking french right now and it will not benefit your future at all or help

Egregious Jr. - April 2, 2017, 5:10 pm

Lol. I've been taking french since I was 6 or 7. I suck ass at it, it's tough if you're not dedicated. Maybe it's just because I've had awful teachers growing up. It's useful in a lot of places though, a lot of countries speak french.

Enzio - April 2, 2017, 5:11 pm

I speak and write in French. Ask me anything.

Should you learn French? Only if you intend to live in France, Belgium, Switzerland,etc.

Other than that, I don't think there's a reason to learn it.

AMAVI - April 2, 2017, 5:12 pm

Might aswell go for it, I speak 3 languages and french is a good one to know, fluent in it btw.

JustAnotherRandomDude - April 2, 2017, 5:16 pm

I think French would be a good language to learn, especially if you want to spend a lot of time in France or even working there or for a French company.

Other than that, I don't think there's a reason to learn it.I just want to visit there often those countries and some African countries that speak it. Because these countries are very beautiful to go to so I'd spend lots of time so I gotta know the lang.
