as electrical engineer student I could suggest you make social media accounts(IG, Facebook, YouTube) and show some cool circuits you came up with

Also EE myself. If you can learn good PCB design practices, it's quite lucrative. $100/hr is a pretty easy to get freelancing. With experience, raising that to $150/hr is pretty easy. Myself and a few friends occasionally share some work during the semester and it certainly pays the bills.

Stop looking for bs methods to make money online, you'll just fall into marketing traps which waste your time and money.

Go on ude my /youtube learn and some skills such as programming, graphics, video editing, marketing, etc and use it to make actual money.

Find something you're good at and stick with it.

Or you could do a bit of self employed work on the side.

How advanced skills would you need in programming and graphics to be able to earn money on it?

Advanced enough to convince the client and get the work done. That's pretty much it. You cant quantify it.
