JakobF - May 10, 2017, 5:58 am

Had a terrible experience with this seller.

I sent him Bitcoin for a 100$ card. This was about a week or so ago, when Bitcoin suddenly had about 140,000 unconfirmed transactions. I sent the recommended miners fee that blockchain automatically fills without much of a thought. Basically the transaction took about 2 days to confirm and in that time this user sold the card I was going to buy and told me that I can wait until he gets his next card or get a refund. I chose the option to wait. Yet, after about 3-4 more days, the seller messaged me to tell me he won't be getting a card and that he'll be sending me a refund.

Here's where things get sticky. In the refund, this guy sent me back the dollar amount that I sent him, not the Bitcoin amount. Since the time I sent him the Bitcoin, there was about a 10$ difference in the dollar value of the Bitcoin amount I sent him. Yet this seller REFUSED to send me back that equal Bitcoin amount even after he sold the card that I bought and waited for and after I waited even longer with no results.

Staying away from this user.

I offered you a refund several times after your 50+ hour transaction because you are unable to comprehend how Bitcoin works.

I asked to be paid in $75 worth of Bitcoin not a fraction of Bitcoin. So when you send me $75, I send you $75 back.

It just so happens that BTC went up slightly and now you're demanding the BTC you sent instead of the cash value I asked for, and you sent.

We all know you wouldn't be asking for the BTC amount if BTC had fell to $10 per coin. You'd be asking for the $75 that you had originally paid.

I cant stand scum like you. Always trying to get something for free.

Sorry about that, allow me to clarify.

What I mean is if you need a card size that isn't shown and would like to place and order for the very next one that I obtain, you can do so. The only caveat being the $300 AGC value minimum.

You are free to purchase any of the existing cards I already have on hand.

Hope that helps. ?

To respond to the last part, you posed that question to me in PMs and I responded. I would want the Bitcoin amount because I understand that Bitcoin has the ability to insanely rise at any point in time.

I'm not even trying to get something for free. I'm trying to get back everything I sent you because you're keeping a part of it even though you couldn't provide a gift card.
