What actually happened to Flappy Bird? I know it got removed, but why did they have to remove it?

Charger - April 29, 2017, 9:33 am

It hit the pipe too many times and as a result, the trend died.

Tohka - April 29, 2017, 9:34 am

Dev said it too addictive so best option was to removed it.

source: all over google.

bdawn - April 29, 2017, 9:34 am

Must've been reported for animal right violations so in order to keep good PR, they removed it.

Note: I don't know actually...didn't even notice it was gone.

Woods - April 29, 2017, 9:36 am

After kids were killing eachother over it the Dev removed it.

Fresh Khalifa - April 29, 2017, 9:36 am

I heard it was because the developer was getting death threats from angry gamers.

Windows 98 - April 29, 2017, 9:37 am

I believe that children were actually killing themselves over the game, and although the owner was making thousands and thousands a day he decided to remove it to avoid any legal issues and, well, to not have children killing themselves lol. That's what I heard at least.

Regulus - April 29, 2017, 9:37 am

I heard the developer of it got death threats towards him and his family etc because of the game.
I read it somewhere so I am not sure how true it is.

Wouldn't be surprised. People are fucking crazy getting mad over the smallest of things.

The dev is a dumbass. He was making $50,000/day from advertisement. Said it was "too much" for him and removed the app from the app store. After some time went by, people kind of forgot about the game, he said he was planning to put it back on the app store. I don't know what is happening now but he fucked up.

For some people, money isn't everything in life. Getting death threats against your family and yourself would be cause for nearly anyone to think twice. Can't blame him, it is his decision after all.

I agree, many people forget that the human race is a trillion times more valuable then money.

Think about it, we are all different and unique so we are so much more valuable then currency.

I heard this as well.
