Thread: Remove vouch copies from the market section.

Donald Trump Jr. - April 30, 2017, 2:27 pm

I haven't seen someone give a vouch copy and have that person write a bad review, the truth is if you give someone something for FREE they will undoubtedly write a good review whether the ebook or other type of product is terrible or not.

All this does is create fake vouches that in turn are used to attract other new hfers.

I know there's going to be someone that says "how do I gain traction on my product."
Just wait for people to purchase it.

Also all these vouches are given before they even try the product, just from reading it.

People dont always vouch affter buying, making it hard to have good reviews

Solicit reviews from them then, if I personally buy a ebook that works (none do) I'd be willing to write a 2 page review.

if that's the case then remove all the 100 people saying

"Vouch for this user, I have seen him post on HF once before and this boosts my post count".

A lot of these "VOUCH FOR THIS USER" is just fake to boost post count which leads to some scammers on HF

That's something completely different though, they're not vouching for the product just the person.

You took the words out of my mouth, this is exactly what should happen.

Why are you trying to fix something that isn't a problem?

It is a problem though, they're literally reviewing the product before trying it out.

SocialAgency - April 30, 2017, 2:38 pm

Removing vouches isn't the best option here.

Get like 5 verified vouchers that leave honest reviews on every section will work.

Are they? Everyone? How can you be so sure?

I got a review copy yesterday and haven't left a review yet because i am studying the ebook at the moment, not going to post a review on something that i haven't actually reviewed.

The market section itself is proof.

Look at all the threads that gave vouch copy's out.

The reviews are written within 10 minutes to an hour. (And half of that time is trying to make a good review for the person who gave them a free product.)

Lol this isn't gonna happen any time soon.

So all products are the same? Whether it is a service, software, ebook or whatever.. Come one. You simply cannot suggest this for everything in the marketplace and this part:

Quote:The reviews are written within 10 minutes to an hour

If it is a software, you don't need more than ten minutes. All you need to check is so that the functions are working, how well it works and all that. Hopefully you'll see where i am coming from, this is just what i think tho.

Anyway. You are completely ignoring the fact that Omniscient does not accept rules suggestions.

Would be nice if people offer a price of $110 for example and then a $10 rebate for a review weather bad or good.

Seems like an alright idea but I can imagine some butthurt people not giving money back if they got a bad review

Bluffer - April 30, 2017, 3:02 pm

The seller should choose the right people for vouch copies that will not lie to impress the seller.

This is not a good idea. Sometimes a person who is new to the forum will want to sell something but nobody will trust them and the best option when that happens is for a UB3R to be given a vouch copy to confirm its a working method/not a scam.

poisson - April 30, 2017, 3:07 pm

I think sellers should have the right to give away review copies, and it's up to the potential buyer on how to interpret the legitimacy of those reviews.

Web_Development - April 30, 2017, 3:11 pm

Well, you are missing something important here.

Vouch copies actually help to avoid from getting scammed as well...

If I didn't need to provide a vouch copy for my service review, I could just make thread and sell something I do NOT even have.

You pay and get scammed, gg.

What I hate the most are the

"MUST BUY!! John doe is trustable ALWAYS SELLS QUALITY PRODUCTS!!11 VOUCH!!!" comments

The annoying "Friend vouch"... like that would make someone buy a product.

Weebex - April 30, 2017, 3:48 pm

Or just don't be an idiot and trust everything in the marketplace.

Neal Caffrey - April 30, 2017, 4:34 pm

There used to be a group dedicated called 'The Reviewers'. Honestly, if people didn't get vouch copies, the seller would probably just offer them to 'high quality' members to vouch anyway, or buy a vouch. I'm sure 90% of the marketplace is just 'Vouch for this user, glws' which is very different to 'Vouch for this product'.

Anyway, it's probably not going to change simply because it wouldn't make a real impact imho.

I have. Gotten negged but his ebook was shit

Eagle 95 - April 30, 2017, 11:06 pm

The thing is, there are members who leave honest reviews. It doesn't happen too often but when it does, usually sellers come crying to us to remove that review as they think it's sales trashing which makes it pretty hilarious. ?

I don't see a problem with vouchers. If you look at products outside HF, on many sites you have vouchers. Many, if not all are fake so caution when buying (not just online, everywhere) applies.
