Thread: [\[Help me\]Explaining to a friend to conceal physical media from ATM!](#)

Hey guys! I live in an area in the hood, and while I see a lot of small businesses, I realize that none of them know the safety precautions of hiding physical media. Every time I go to the stores, I notice that the RJ-45 plugged, cat 5/6 is sticking out. One of the store owners and I have gotten close over time, so I decided to put my two sense in and give some advice.

I tell the guy "(insert creative name here) you should hide the wire because someone can just come in, and do a network tap on the wire which is bad because they can steal the info; blah blah blah"

He didn't want to do it because it sounds like too much work.

I know traffic is encrypted, but it hasn't stopped people thusfar.

Anyways, can you guys help me convince him to hid is treasures? Like in terms of how easy it is, and whatnot?

I cant think of anything else other than people can wiretap.

Not everything is encrypted... and not everything that is unencrypted isn't valuable. Unfortunately they won't understand it unless something BAD happens ? I know how you feel about it...

So in other words, riperoni my frienderoni?

I dont want his reputation, or business to take an unnecessary negative turn, but at this point, i guess all there is to do is hope n pray

I loled ?

You already did your part. Unless you want try to show him with a little demonstration what could happen and he accepts there's no much you can do.

Careful how you go about doing this though. The person may take this the wrong way, has happened to me in the past.
