OG Sales Thread: <https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5548919&highlight=scrapebot>

I purchased this project to just remove NETSeal and make it freeware but instead i'll just open source it for Leet/Ubbers. Please do not resell this source or compile it and make a program then sell it. You can use this for personal use or to learn from the code.

Leet and Ubbers PM me if you would like this source, thank you.

Not uber/leet but if you ever decided to give this out to regular users - or can make an exception in this case - Hit me up :).

(cool that you give back to the community this way btw, knowledge is power!)

People paid for this including myself, and now it's just being given out for free?

After it being passed through like 4 different people, I for sure wont be buying shit off each of the people its been through. I sense its just going to be abandoned now, all the sources will go to shit. I got my money's worth, but still.. No way to do business.

I dont care if this was 'your decision', you sell a lifetime license to then release it for free?

I have never once sold a lifetime license, maybe the previous owner did but not me. I have never marketed this project one bit.

When you take over a project everything within it transfers over to the new owner (you), so yes you did in proxy sell lifetime licenses to customers. Like I said, I dont really care I will just avoid every single person who took ownership of this because it was just a quick money scheme, sell "lifetime" licenses to abandon the project and release it for free a couple of months later.

Typical HF bullshit, and yes while it may not be your fault exclusively you're taking the brunt force given you are the most recent to of taken the project.

I never sold anything and I could have renamed all the code to spermscape and released it as well. Be happy its open source and you can support it yourself.

Which still would be you fucking over every single person who paid for this. Name it spazmoidal scraper I really could not give a fuck. You by proxy sold lifetime licenses for you to release it for free a couple months later, where you as well as the multiple other 'owners' have milked it dry, sold it as much as you can, got bored and now released it to gain some reputation. Be happy?

Who do I contact for my refund or do I just chargeback given its 'open source' and 'free of charge'...?

Ah, I knew this would crop up. So, let's just say the original owner of this scraper sold 150 copies for $2 each, that's $300, he then sells the project for another $50 which makes it $350 (Just because the original cost is a petty amount does not excuse piss poor business etiquette). The second owner updates it a little, sells more lifetime licenses and so on and so forth, now it's got to the stage where the final owner has the rights to the project, nobody wants to buy it thus he releases it for free to gain some reputation. I can only assume all support for it will now cease to exist.

So not only is it available to everybody for free, if it breaks you're fucked unless you know how to fix it, even worse the sources list is now available and will soon be saturated. Yes I could go and buy another proxy scraper which I will most likely have to do now.

I guess according to you it's ok for people to sell lifetime licenses, cash in while the goings good then when sales dry up they can forget about this 'updates, support, lifetime license' they SOLD and release it for free/abandon the project simply because nobody is buying it.

Good logic, children should not be doing business.
