Thread: three weeks ago I opened up my own store.

Vito Scaletta - May 29, 2017, 5:10 am

Three weeks ago I opened up my own store, where I repair broken iPhone's and iPad's.

So far so good. Invested $26200 and I have already made back $15140 and that's is just in three weeks, every day more people are getting to know that my store exist and everyday the profit is increasing a little bit..

from the calculations done before I opened it was calculated I would have $357k

so, so far its looking good.. $15140 / 21 = $721$

$721 \times 26 \text{ (mon-sat)} = $18755$

$18755 \times 12 = $225070$

so its looking like I'm going to make a little less than the calculations but still... AWESOME going from earning $11891 a year to making $225k a year

Thats my bragging of today.

EDIT: Math was way of.. but is correct now

Move - May 29, 2017, 5:12 am

Lol was a really smart investment as far as I'm concerned lol.

You're telling me you have been making over $700 a day just repairing broken iPhones and iPads?

SIM-3257834 - May 29, 2017, 5:15 am

Seems like opening a store like this would be a easy profit if you live somewhere that doesn't have one. In fact you don't need a store as long as you can have a mobile work station.

Inmodwetrust - May 29, 2017, 5:19 am

I'd be lying if I said I wasn't even a little bit jealous.

Congrats dude, keep the monies rolling in.

Vito Scaletta - May 29, 2017, 5:19 am

math was way of, but I have calculated correctly now..

true, but a store is much more convenient for the client.. they then have a shop to go to in case of questions and / or problems related to my work (warranty) or other issues.

Couldn't do a store personally, mainly because the military is my full time job. I have repaired iPhones in the past and they're pretty easy to repair. Kept one because the owner thought it was a goner and I scored a semi new phone for a low cost. Maybe I can do it part time but I'll have to have people trust me when I drive off with their phone and repair it in my dorm. I got a compact sedan maybe I can do a mobile workstation since I can fit everything inside.

Is there still a demand for this? I always assumed that phone repair services along with computer repair services were dead as people just bought new ones.

a rather high demand to be honest.. last friday I had a revenue of $2k ..

The thing is that, its cheaper than buying a new one + you don't have to stress with contacts and all that other bullshit when replacing the screen/charging port/battery you name it.

Rod$ - May 29, 2017, 7:36 am

I also have a deal with a business that has 4200 mobile subscriptions where 85% of the subscriptions have iPhone.

Closing now: revenue of today $1514

$700 a day is great. My local repair shop charged £109 to fix my iPhone 6s. Its a good business to be in. Is it an actual store or a kiosk type thing OP?

What are your thoughts on doing this and having people ship in their phones? That way I could target the whole country? Or do they prefer to go into a store?

People can ship their phone but most of the revenue comes from drop in customers.

doesnt make sense op

as if your doing that then just do it at home. you dont need a store to repair an ipad and iphone. look at ebay as perfect example of it. people do it out of their homes and make a killing as no overhead costs.

He has locally waaaaay less competition + It's easier to just repair them and people come pick them up rather than dealing with shipping n shit like that

I have to have a store as its a part of a frenchise concern

A kid from my high school used to do this. Seems like a decent business to get into.

Do you have a website or anything?

Arizonalce - June 1, 2017, 7:56 am

Looking at the pictures you posted I'd get some contractors to pain the outside and get a nice banner/logo made to spruce things up a bit.

You should also look into reselling phones

They are... the landlord is going to paint it, they just need to wait for good weather.

reselling phones has little profit, and people are going to bug me with questions/problems about the phone. That's why I don't do that.

OnlyProfit - June 1, 2017, 8:09 am

Isnt it E-Commerce because $700 daily is really hard to reach unless you make money on referrering people to shops that repair.

I repairs the phones, I don't send them off to any where.

Keep in mind I live in a different country than america and prices here are higher than prices in america.

Update as of 14.06.2017

I opened up my shop on the 8th of may, that's 5 weeks and a couple of days ago, in that time the revenue of my shop is at the total of $26678 which I'm perfectly happy about.

The last week I have made approx $1140 a day.

when you break your glass, the warranty is voided, so it does not matter where you fix your phone.

On a iPhone depending on which type I use approx 15-30 min

On a iPad its taking a week, the glue on the screen needs to settle in so i takes much longer time.
