Thread: What is this website called?

There is a website where you can use your bank information/credit card/debit card to make a master card that can be used online. You can choose the maximum amount to allow to be charged to the card so that if it is compromised by a risky source you won't lose more than you set.

WTF is this place called? I need to use a MasterCard for a purchase but I don't want to use my real card and risk it being closed and have to go through all of the hassle. Someone posted about the site here before, that is why I ask.

Let's not be stupid now. ?

It isn't a payment processor like that. You literally put in your personal payment information, click "create card", and it will automate a VISA or MasterCard for you with its own number, CVC, Exp. Date, etc. You then can use that generated copy of the card to pay for things through risky vendors and then the charge will go through the created MasterCard and will charge your REAL mastercard/bank for the payment.

Never heard of it but sounds interesting. GI finding.

Bank of America does this if you're banking with them.

It's somewhat like a VCC. You don't buy an already made CC though; you literally create the card on your account only.

I don't think this is the one I was thinking of but this one looks legit? It might have been but I swear the site looked different, I was on mobile though.

<https://www.entropay.com/>

edit: wow i knew i was talking about the right site! thanks dude.

Edit: I had the thread opened and was thinking what I used before. Glad to see you found it.

My original post ;)

I think you are looking for EntroPay.
