Thread: Rough or Smooth mouse pad?

Zherk - June 5, 2017, 12:11 pm

I'm finally getting the setup I've been envisioning piece by piece, and wanted to know what kind of extended mouse pad texture you guys prefer. I plan on getting one custom made so I kind of don't wanna go wrong with it. Thanks in advance!

I've a smooth texture on my mouse pad.

Get one that best suites your mouse. Opticals like smooth, while laser like rough textures.

Do some research before buying! I prefer optical bc faster reaction times but that's just my preference

Gell mouspads are the best.

I use a steelseries qck (Cloth~)

I had a hard mousepad before and after I switched to a soft I can never see myself go back

If you're into gaming, a smooth surface is what you're probably going to prefer. If it's just general use, a textures one may be better and may last longer.

When I was gaming a lot, the best mouse mat I used was:

Steelseries 5L - it has five layers, so it had a very slight texture, but the mouse would glide across it like it had no friction what-so-ever.

I would always get into rough ones, or ones in between.

Smooth is ehhehhh

Semi-smooth? This corsair pad (drops down to $14.99 sometimes).

Not sure if you call a woven pad rough or not.

I personally use razer goliathus control, It has a cloth texture and works very well with my razer naga.

I personally use the Ducky Flipper EXTRA mouse pad. Its a extended mouse pad and in my opinion doesn't feel rough, its more on the smoother side.

I got corsair MM800 Polaris, it's quite a rough scratchy texture but the movement is so fluent with the mouse, it works incredibly well together.

Better than fabric mousepads I've had
