Thread: Good Security Combination?

aerohacker - June 7, 2017, 9:47 pm

Kaspersky Internet Security + Malwarebytes Premium + Zemana Anti-Malware together running in real time is a good security combination or can make some incompatibility?

5chn4pp - June 8, 2017, 12:04 am

Yeah just remove Zemana and you're golden.

He/she should have no issues keeping* Zemana part of their configuration.

Not my point, my point is that zemana is just purely unnecessary in this case.

Also pls stop grave-digging.

It's not 'grave-digging' when the thread is still relevant.

Zemana can still be considered as necessary as layering on-demand choices is always good (as long as it isn't excessive).

You don't make sense, having 3 different "on-demand choices" at once is excessive and this is still a gravedig, I can come with other examples:

(Sep 2, 2017 10:16 PM)Spiked Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) It's useful for installing Google Chrome.

(Sep 2, 2017 10:04 PM)Spiked Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) TheHackerNews, Reddit (/r/security, /r/technology, /r/privacy), ZDNet

Medium is a nice place to read security related articles also.

(Sep 2, 2017 10:03 PM)Spiked Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Windscribe is a nice VPN service, they offer 10GB of bandwidth a month.

(Sep 2, 2017 10:00 PM)Spiked Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Anti-Virus: Windows Defender

Anti-Malware: Malwarebytes

Let's be real, you don't know shit. You don't know what gravedigging is. It's a forum with a millions of posts, I can post on a topic from a few months ago all I want.

Do you feel good about yourself? Neg-repping a new member and complaining on a thread about it. Fuck off.

On-topic: Having 3 on-demand scanners is not a bad thing as you're just layering security. They have different engine's and different detection's.

He knows more than you. Look at his post history, he is the WHH section.

Says the new guy who just joined the forum, lurk more to understand this forum, its kinda essential.

And what are your qualifications on malware? Being a keyboard warrior doesn't count.

I don't care if you are a new member or omni himself, I'd still neg you.

Having many layers is not always good, if a malicious file bypasses both Kaspersky and Malwarebytes, you can bet your ass on it also bypassing Zemana, its just slowing down his system at that point.

Azim - September 3, 2017, 10:46 pm

yeah that's about as secure as you're gonna get in terms of host security

No, it isn't. Learn something before you offer advice. Maybe you should head over to BleepingComputer or MalwareTips so they can educate your weak mind? :)

I've been to the UNITE schools, maybe you should educate yourself about me before you look stupid.

Nope, we don't want to be identified, and the site I was on (malwarehelpforum.com) is now inactive.

You're ignorant. You never was part of UNITE, and even if you were I highly doubt you completed your training.

Just by looking at your posts I can safely say you don't know shit. ?

I did complete my FRST training, you're just assuming shit about me like every other dumbass, you also dodge questions.
