Thread: SELL SELL SELL

Omniscient - June 8, 2017, 9:11 am

400% increase for the entire crypto market cap in just 2 months is a giant bubble. I suggest many of you sell those alt-coins which have risen so much and aren't worth the math they are blockchained on.

Selling now while the profit is good and others aren't selling off is probably a wise decision. Most should be seeing the leveling off effect that's occurring right now. Once that phase is over the profit takers will hit and push cryptos down very heavily.

My suggestion...sell sell sell and buy on the downside. Nothing wrong with taking your 20% or more profit now and waiting to buy-in again after the fallout.

I know there will be disagreement but let's think with some common sense here. 400% in two months is huge. And not a lot of reason is behind it.

Best of luck to those who bravely hold.

This isn't really panic selling. Most of the alt coins have nothing special about them that would make their valuation increase 400%. There truly is a bubble for lots of alts because everyone invests into them right out of the gates and continues to do so, artificially inflating them. Once people start selling and the bubble bursts, you'll see the real value of the alts that you're holding.

I agree that most of the alt coins have nothing special about them. I do my own research about altcoins and invested in a few. I know what they can bring to the world. I bought the altcoins way before the hype started, the altcoins has to go down REALLY drastic for me to lose any money.

Xeenon - June 8, 2017, 9:22 am

I rarely disagree with you, but this one time, I am going to have to. We are nearing the summer break for a lot of people, and throughout this summer people are going to interact on the Internet a lot more; they are going to read articles, be active on Reddit, forums and so on. This means, that a couple extra pair of hands are going to be introduced to cryptocurrency, learn how profitable it is, and take the risk(s) to pay off their vacations.

I would not consider selling any considerable alt-coins till we are out of the summer/nearing Christmas. People are going to be investing a lot in the summer, solely to try and make some money they can blow in the summer.

Don't you think the rise could have something to do with the increasing adoption of blockchain in the world?

Even the mainstream news sites in my country are posting more and more about blockchain and cryptocurrencies lately while 6 months ago not a single article was to be seen.

Tons of people have only recently heard about blockchain and cryptocurrencies, couldn't that be the source of this massive rise ?

POLY MATH - June 8, 2017, 9:29 am

I believe that a bubble is actually what this is. But, I also believe that it won't drop too much. Depending on where you bought in at, just hold your altcoins. I can't do the math for you but justifying to sell or hold is a case-by-case basis.

i`m sorry but but even tho i benefited of your past advice for ETH i`m going to say pass to this, even if the market will drop for awhile, is too much hassle for me to sell the tons of the coins that i hold especially since i`m still getting them out of poloniex and since i plan to hold at least 1-2 years i highly doubt that in 1-2 years their price will be less than it is now considering that i hold only from top 10, i do feel this thread itself will cause some ppl to panic sell their coins decreasing their price tho.Crypto is the future no doubt so they will keep increasing for good period of time

Quote:Do you advise selling ETH?

Nope.

Quote:I will hold all my coins. I don't like to panic sell.

Panic selling is when they are dropping. Not when they are steady and at high levels. That's just making smart moves.

Quote:What advice can you give to me about my statis?

None.

Quote:Currently sitting on $900 profit in a few weeks but it's getting lower and lower.

$900 profit sounds great. At least it sounds better than $500 profit. But seriously, if you invested say...$500 and now it's worth $1300 (just guessing on your investment) then what's wrong with doing a partial cash out to recoup your initial investment? It guarantees that you don't lose money and you can still hold enough of the coin that future profits might come.

Quote:So everyone should dump their coin. Right.

A fire is burning through the movie theatre. Initially a few people see some smoke. Do you wait till the fire is blazing or do you get out before everyone else rushes the door?

Quote:Convicted long term investor. Let's see what happens.

If you have the stomach and courage to hold long-term then that's good. Not everyone does and when the selling begins many will panic sell.

Quote:Weren't you advising your friends to invest into ETH/BTC at this very same price?

Many on HF are into the alt-coins. Many will fall apart by the end of the year.

I think a lot of serious pump and dumps are happening. Can anyone here explain the 400% overall market cap rise in just two months?

Quote:Hmm guess im betting against you since you called 1300$ bitcoin like two weeks ago...

True dat.

At the very least I'm making a fun thread to discuss the health of the market. Maybe I want a selloff so I can buy cheaper. :)

Quote:If anyone besides omni made this thread, people wouldn't even consider selling their alt coins.. He may be right though.

I think cryptos are just being adopted more and more and more and more, so the marketcap grows just like that....

Selling now while the profit is good and others aren't selling off is probably a wise decision. Most should be seeing the leveling off effect that's occurring right now. Once that phase is over the profit takers will hit and push cryptos down very heavily.

My suggestion...sell sell sell and buy on the downside. Nothing wrong with taking your 20% or more profit now and waiting to buy-in again after the fallout.

I know there will be disagreement but let's think with some common sense here. 400% in two months is huge. And not a lot of reason is behind it.

Best of luck to those who bravely hold.

Quote:I agree there's many coins like that, but Stratis isn't one of those(right now it is kinda but they're going to come with good tech soon).

Bullshit. Name one thing STRAT can do that ETH can't. The whole Stratis roadmap is littered with things that ETH already does right now and better. Stratis is like an early beta of ETH. The only difference I can see is MasterNodes which I am not convinced is good for a crypto economy as it shuts out the masses from being nodes.

Quote:If you look at this scenario, it is obviously a good idea to get out.

I think it's a good idea to take some profit while the profit is obviously good. Personally, I'm not going to sell off but I'm carefully reviewing my portfolio to see where I can profit take now and where I'm willing to hold even if there is a panic sell. That means you must investigate the technology and the market.

Quote:Then how is 1300% increase in ETH not a "proof" that its in a bubble? You're advising not to sell ETH..

I think ETH will drop to under $200 levels (currently $260) but I believe it's the best technology and will recover faster than many alt-coins.

Quote:I've taken your advice & cashed out. Last time I ignored your zCash post, I regretted that and I'm positive this is just going to turn into another Dot-com bubble.

I don't see how a 20% or more correction isn't coming. Buying on the dip is a great way to invest. And here is the truth of cryptos. If you're able to easily get out, you can easily get back in.

CoinMarketCap is showing nearly all red across the board. The entire top 10 is red today. For now it's small 2-5% mostly but what if that continues for 2-3 more days. Many may bail out and a panic sell will occur. That's just how markets operate.

Quote:ETH is certainly no longer considered an "alt-coin" in my opinion.

Absolutely agree 100%. Where-as Bitcoin is the defacto blockchain for crypto currencies and has LTC, DASH, and DOGE as the alternative...you now have ETH which has alts like STRAT and SIA.

Quote:Dot-com bubble was 1.7 trill market value. We're at 100bill, crypto is not even close to its full potential yet.

Market cap of cryptos must imho reach 10 trillion and it will one day.

Quote:Tell me I'm the crazy one but by god, everyone is playing a dangerous game.

I don't say Omniscient is wrong or right, We can never know for sure. So just do your research and if you really think a coin will be valuable and you can afford to lose the money when its crashes, go for it, But don't follow people's opinions blindly, Do your own research.

Quote:Do I hold my BTC or sell it? How do I know BTC won't drop 20% aswell?

May 25th BTC hit $2800+. Just two days later it dropped to under $2000 for an hour or so and took another 24 hours to go over $2200 again. And it then took till June 6th to peek at $2900. It's not unreasonable to consider the new norm for BTC to be somewhere in-between $2k and $2800. It's just over $2700 right now. Do you buy at the higher end or do you sell? Day traders work on the days highs and lows. Buying at $2350 then selling at $2650 is a 13% profit which is excellent for short term gains. Bitcoin has always had wild swings. You must ask yourself if $2900 is the peak for the rest of 2017 or just the beginning of the rise. My personal view is that we're reaching 2017 highs.

Buyers remorse is the worst possible thing :p

Sell and it could go up and you will be upset you lost money

Hold and it could go down and then you have lost some money

Best thing to do is research the market, and try and get in for free. (If you invest $1k and have made $2k, then think about cashing out say 1k and then ridding the market free)

The issue with BTC/ETH now, is you can not really do a whole lot with it. It isnt accepted enough to really go out to the store and buy things with it. Once that happens we will see more of a value to it. However the whole point of buying it now is seeing the future in that it will become more wildly accepted

Selling now while the profit is good and others aren't selling off is probably a wise decision. Most should be seeing the leveling off effect that's occurring right now. Once that phase is over the profit takers will hit and push cryptos down very heavily.

My suggestion...sell sell sell and buy on the downside. Nothing wrong with taking your 20% or more profit now and waiting to buy-in again after the fallout.

I know there will be disagreement but let's think with some common sense here. 400% in two months is huge. And not a lot of reason is behind it.

Best of luck to those who bravely hold.

Maybe most altcoins will take a blow but Bitcoin will still be alive and well.

And Bitcoin's only just getting started. They plan to have segwit by September active which finally means we'll be able to see people paying for coffee using Bitcoin due to low fees and faster tx times

The issue with most coins is that they are traded purely for investment unlike Bitcoin.

Big miners possibly delayed Segwit on BTC purely so they could pump altcoins and dump them (litecoin etc)

I've picked the coins that I like, but it's kind of hard to predict what will happen with the market. I don't think you can relate crypto to the dot com era. They just aren't on the same level imo. A lot of people knew what websites were. I have to explain what crypto is to literally everybody that asks me. (Most of my coworkers).

Other than that... my plan was to hold till early August before my Europe trip. Will this drop go passed August? Or will it rise back up again before August and keep rising.

GodlessOlympian - June 8, 2017, 3:53 pm

Great advice, Omni. Definitely something to consider given the fact that there has been an unprecedented increase in price in the market. I have a feeling the pitfall we will be facing won't be as terrible as we are thinking for only 1 reason. BTC has been introduced to new markets and has become more popular due to its recent spike in value. As long as public interest grows even as the crash happens. BTC's value will still be something fierce. We we're all expecting BTC to only grow another grand by next year during new years. This huge price spike is legendary and will not last forever. However, because it's already surpassed our expectations we cannot fool ourselves into thinking that it's value isn't close to true value in the market.

While I agree with you that the bubble is present, many alt coins does not even have a purpose. It's all talk, oh this coin partened up with this bank, so it will raise! That does not mean that the coins is needed. However, I will not pull out soon as I dont believe this bubble will pop soon. I dont think this artificial speculation will be gone in days, it might be years. Truth to be told, many people believe in ETH, BTC. I sincerely believe they will be the survivors of the crash, though they will drop drastically too. It's a textbook bubble. All coins barring Bitcoin and Ethereum have close to 0 actual utility, and even ethereum's as a currency is debatable. 'Interesting technology' != current utility. The value all these altcoins have is from users buying it and hoarding it, which currently is going up as people still pour in artificially inflate the value. It's reminiscent of the dot com bubble of 2000, when people poured into tech stocks that weren't actually making any money, but the promise of 'future gains' made people pour in, causing it to inflate before crashing.

The worst part is a lot of these currencies have the top 100 owners of the coin owning 50%+ of the coin. That's crazy - if those people chose to limit their selling, the coins will be stable, but long-term the coin is at the mercy of those owners and when they dump it's good night to those coins.

90% of people in this thread saying they'll hold because it'll go back up, but I'd say the majority of those people who'd be hard pressed to explain bitcoin's or ethereum's core technology, let alone do a long-term trade-off analysis. The bubble combined with people here who have lack basic stock market skills (stops etc), well I worry for people who got it in after the currencies did x10. It's not popped yet due to the inflation, but the dot com bubble didn't pop overnight. When it pops though.. well we'll see.

Crypto currency is en entirely different concept with many global actors involved in it. We just have crossed 100Billion$ Mcap and we are in 2017 with so many booming economics. Where I am not clear though is you said several times 'the entire crypto market'

By this do you mean you are suggesting selling out to fiat in the interim?

If the whole thing is a bubble then that makes sense.

But if said bubble bursts, holding strong crypto will retain a lot of value and may even continue growth as the 'pruning sell' happens.

Just curious if you were suggesting moving to fiat in the interim or what.

I will keep holding major coins such as bitcoin,ethereum,litecoin but sell all other altcoins. The issue is that a lot of altcoins don't actually have any real world uses and are just speculation.

Poutine - June 8, 2017, 9:05 pm

There is alot more people holding their coins that before. Internet is changing and technologies are evolving. I see a very good support on the markets because everyone is looking to be the new winklevoss or dan bilzerian.

Well NO. NO. NO.

I do agree with you though on knowing the tech (at least a bit), And why you are investing.

The no no no is about early adopters early adopter is nth. And it apparently can't correct itself. This isn't the days of Henry Ford having 5p years to figure shit out tbh.

Wild west. But crypto will prevail in our lifetime. Fiat are failing globally.. who is buying btc/every market (Another thread, Another section).

I think the title is more of a 'clickbait' kind-of thing. In the actual thread he explains that his goal is just to get people to think and not to actually dump all of their coins at once (like some have already done for some reason... it's like they didn't read the thread at all). He is just trying to get people to understand that most of these coins are valued a lot higher than they are meant to be, which is completely correct.

That doesn't go for every alt coin. I agree on most of them, but for example FACTOM has real legs to stand on. They are supported by the Bill & Melinda Gates foundation, and Tim Draper (Billionaire investor) and a few Chinese investment funds have also bought in...

In my opinion they are more like an ordinary startup which happens to use the block chain due to it being a superior technology.

I like focusing on undervalued coins that are less than or equal to roughly 1 cent each as there is a greater chance of making a massive profit.

I've done nothing but post my logic and to say I have dishonest intentions is rather amusing and offensive at the same time.

And anyone that thinks I made this thread because of Cuban, that's laughable. Maybe him and I see similar things. How can you not see these past 2 months as a bubble?

I don't publish my holdings and I try not to discuss specific alt-coins even those I am heavily invested in. The exception would be ETH.

Quote:From what i gathered from this post to make it short is (Secure your profits) and be ready for to buy back in after the fire is over.

Yes, and isn't that a sound investment strategy? Sell high, buy low. Market is currently high (very high), so it's time to sell.

Titles get attention. Who cares what the title is?

Quote: The issue is that a lot of altcoins don't actually have any real world uses and are just speculation.

Yup, and that's going to cause many of them to crash eventually.

Quote:I disagree omni. Markets have grown hugely mostly because china lifted bans and japanese and korean investors bought in at the same time.

I was reading up on that this week. Chinese exchanges lifting their withdrawal blocks should have caused a sell off but it seemed to have the opposite effect.

Quote:The same shit has happened before...Dogecoin, feathercoin...I'm sure there are hundreds more from 2013 that very little in this community have heard of. Litecoin is still barely hanging on.

Exactly. But oddly enough LTC has gone from $3 to $30+ which imho is amazing. Many of these alt-coins with $100+ million market cap are brand new. That's outrageous. Let's get an example...GameCredits (GAME). Their site is crap. Coin is nearly 2 years old. It doesn't do anything ETH can't do. A most basic coin upon review with nothing that should excite anyone. And yet it has nearly $300 million market cap with almost $4 million traded in the past 24 hours. Currently #24 on CMC. WHY? If someone can logically explain that valuation I'd be grateful.

Quote:Is holding Tether smart?

Tether is directly worth $1 USD about. That's the point of it. You do exchanges to Tether and you can avoid using an exchange to go to FIAT but still have a stable coin that's linked to USD value. Tether will not go up (or down) in value.

Lol not sure who you're replying too, but I'll reply on their behalf.

The actual logic behind a $300 million valuation for GAME is pretty simple if you look a little deeper than just the name.

[Video: https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=a_saWJKtOS8]

MobileGO received over $54-million in ICO funds, so that's a big head start than the majority of other projects around this niche. That'll be used to attract new gamers and developers. The more gamers there are the more profit the platform generates, etc. This will have a rapid growth once launched, and the best part is that they're buying the Gamecredits back to burn them!

$54Million budget > MobileGO platform based on BLOCKCHAIN TECH > Gamecredits to purchase new games, and reward developers aswell as gamers better than google play > profit.

I'm easily predicting this to take #5 on coinmarketcap this year. Been in since 15 cents aswell, so that helps haha.

I don't think that was his intended message at all.

I think the title is more of a 'clickbait' kind-of thing. In the actual thread he explains that his goal is just to get people to think and not to actually dump all of their coins at once (like some have already done for some reason... it's like they didn't read the thread at all). He is just trying to get people to understand that most of these coins are valued a lot higher than they are meant to be, which is completely correct.

<https://hackforums.net/showthread.php?tid=5642127&mode=single&uid=1>

I think people are underestimating this man's intelligence. I think his goal is to get this "BUY THIS COIN" or "WHAT SHOULD I BUY" kind of shit to stop as it is corrupting this section.

DogeBoosting - June 9, 2017, 1:25 pm

I believe this is due to blockchain technology starting to go more mainstream. The total marketcap is only 100 billion. A single company such as Apple is worth 7-8x that. This shows how much room for growth there is.

So you're going to compare the single most profitable company in the entire world to startup blockchain technologies which in most cases have not actually made a single dollar beyond their own coin creation.

Realize this people...

Company A decides they're going to create an alt-coin. They do a whitepaper, grab some people for the "team", create a site, post on BCT, hype their ICO, and BAM....they suddenly have a $100 million market cap on their alt-coin which is largely owned by them during a premine or at the very least they've gained enough from initial mining of early blocks.

Where is the proven value in that? And these companies don't necessarily need to make money but I do think they need to prove the value and utility of their blockchain technology.

OliveSales - June 9, 2017, 1:53 pm

I want to start off by saying I have around 5000$ invested in crypto right now and don't plan on selling anytime soon.

I think what Omni is trying to do is open our eyes a little. Everyone posting in the crypto section probably has money in it and are currently making a decent amount of money (in comparison to how much you have invested). With such profits everyone is being blinded by what can actually be going... which is these companies actually have made no money and are currently running on hype and hope.

I have no doubt everyone here is constantly checking their portfolio maybe 5+ times an hour and get very excited at the thought of even talking about crypto.

If you only have couple hundred dollars invested and don't care about the money.. Keep your investment. If you have a lot of money invested you need to really think over what all the possibilities are (myself included).

The biggest problem with crypto currencies is that a lot of people are interested but do not have any idea about how or what it's used for. Most people are in it to make money and not for the actual technology unfortunately.

Once crypto becomes more main stream and user friendly that is when we will see some currencies drop off as they have very little to no purpose.

To an avarange person right now the whole process of crypto currencies is fairly complex and most people lose interest, this is just from my personal experience and my friends that have tried to invest but just got bored. Even the simple verification process can be complex and time consuming.

I would completely agree with you that some coins created for one purpose only and like you've said it's very risky investing large amounts. However if you do not take any risks you won't ever get any rewards. Safe money doesn't make money!

I hope the future of crypto is bright and it continues to grow for next few years!

Markets are so volatile right now. That means what we can view today may not reflect in the market tomorrow. What I see in today's (literally just today) market is investors moving out of weaker investments and into stronger ones. ETG up over 15% today, Bitcoin about 2-3% and there is huge volume in BitShares which I know zero about. Weaknesses are in Stratis and SIA. I predicted profit takers would spark a panic sell-off frenzy but I think we're too early to say for sure how this market will mature. Smart money looks like it's going to the staple technologies though.

It's interesting that many SIA and STRAT investors are willing to hold long-term.

I'm personally buying and holding every ETH I can.

I think it's reasonable to say that ETH can move to $450 before the end of the month, and possibly $600+ by the time the BTC fork occurs. These are conservative estimates based on current growth % + pullbacks forecast.

Also trying to stack ETH asap, even mining it..

This exactly right here. SIA and STRAT really are not long term coins and do not offer anything unique that other coins lack. The only reasonable long term investment opportunity I see is in ETH.

I always say this to my friends because a lot of them panic sell then regret it month down the line. Unless you are good at spotting dips and rises there is no point of even guessing. You will end up loosing twice as much. Best way for an average trader to make a profit is to invest leave it for a month or two then cash out if you made a profit and then re invest.

That's just my opinion if you can't bare the ride just don't invest or try chasing it. The hardest thing is to hold during a dip! However I do agree sometimes it is best to cash out and cut your loses.

I can definitely see the logic in this post though, it's insane that it actually increased this much in a short period of time, but if the market cap increasing is a result of a bunch of money being thrown in to cryptos, then is it possible that people will continue to throw billions into cryptos and the growth will just continue?

Just the pattern i've noticed over last months. There has now been 3 rapid growths of Ethereum in the past few months and each time it has dropped a significant amount before going back up. This growth lasts around 7-9 days then it drops. This also affected alts on some occasions.

Growth between 10th - 17th March

First drop 17th March

Growth between 26th April and 5th May

Second drop between 5th and 9th May

Growth between 18th and 25th May

Third drop 25th May

Growth between 3rd June and 11th June

Forth drop? The growth has been around similar amount of time before the drop. It seems like after a huge growth there is a dump into fiat. I might be wrong but that's what I have noticed

I think people should hold BTC, ETH, STRAT.

Anything else it would probably be wise to sell.

It's not like ALT coins were all pump/dump BUT they were inflated because of the bubble true.

thrudda - June 11, 2017, 6:01 pm

Really on the fence about cashing out, taking Stratis for example from $2 - $10 in such a short period and now it's correcting itself. Omni have been bashing it from the very start when it was around $0.50 cents and look at where it is now.

But I do agree that we may be in a bubble, will do more research and not let the greed go to my head. Thanks for this thread! ?

FoKilPt - June 12, 2017, 1:30 am

Definitely holding onto what little BTC I have left. Anyone read the articles of "experts" saying in a decade a bitcoin could be $10,000? With how fast it has risen, from 400ish in 2013 to what it is now.. Who knows how far and fast it could grow. The only time I would sell bitcoin is if I seen (another) $400+ surge. Then just rebuy when it goes back down.

Times like these makes me wish I would have bought C.A.T when some guy was selling it at like half price. I just couldn't afford it. He was even willing to let me test it out with $20 in BTC of his own money. I waited too long and I think he either sold it or he is holding on to it.

All i see is classic up and downs.. When bitcoin is going down everything else gets effected. Thats why you see all of them go up and down together. It will go back up again... Its just that the more fame bitcoin gets, the more unstable it becomes which is logical if you think about it.

Eth doesn't get effected by bitcoin because it can stand by itself.. watch as bitcoin go back up again in 2-3 days.

I think there is more bleeding to come especially for alt-coins.

Bitcoin hit $1200 years ago. Then settled down in the $400-$600 range for a very long time. Don't assume that it can't fall to half of the high ($3000) and stabilize there for months or even years.

I'm not sure we'll see these dip much more and I'd say that it's time to BUY BUY BUY again. I know personally I'm going to start grabbing as many ETH and BTC as I can.

Everything I read makes me believe many of these alt-coin ICO's are going to fail and imho aren't worth investing into and they are much more of a gamble than anything else. The ones currently in top 20 worth $100 million or more just don't seem to be justified for that much of a market cap.

Too many members were high on their get-rich-quick thinking.

Will cryptos bounce back? Yes, but not all of them. I'd say a good portion of these hot alt-coins have seen their highs come and go.

Consider an ICO and how it works for a moment. They come up with a concept, produce whitepaper, website, and then sell the ICO in exchange for BTC or ETH. They raise $50 million on day one. On day two they need to sell the BTC or ETH in order to operate. That's caused a lot of sell pressure in the market. I think a lot of these ICO's are pushing the market south. The giant ETH debacle (flash-crash) may have been caused by a stupid ICO holder even. I haven't read a good analysis yet on who did it.

ICO's imho are going to cash out that $50 million or at least a large portion of it. And then they may think, hmm....we're rich on day one, why blow all this cash on development when they can spend $2 million to make it look like they tried and the rest on themselves.

But most of this market correction for the blue-chip cryptos has just created a buying opportunity. Again, this is something obvious to me and anyone paying real attention to the market.

These are all the blue-chip buys:

BTC
LTC

These are the secondary also-rans:

STEEM
ETC

And these are the high-risk:

IOTA
BITShares
Stratis
ByteCoin
Golem
Maid
SIA
Waves
Stellar Lumens

The high risk cryptos are a gamble but ones worth noting as potentials for high profit but also huge loss. They will be unpredictable as some will be losers.

The blue-chip set are going to continue to reach new highs even in 2017 and will surely bounce back. I've already called it as October for a big crypto month. That may seem really far away for some of you but it's not. What you buy today may be worth 10-50% more in 4 months and that's a great ROI. Even if this set recovers half of what it's dropped in 18 days you'll see a 10% return.

Oh, and the market may continue sliding for another week but my best guess is that it will stabilize by the first week of July and the majority of the bleeding has past.

Could you share any insight on why you think October will be a big month for crypto?

Great article that I think is very relevant to what you're saying regarding ICOs and the bubble:

(Jun 26, 2017 06:48 AM)Omniscient Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Too many members were high on their get-rich-quick thinking.

Will cryptos bounce back? Yes, but not all of them. I'd say a good portion of these hot alt-coins have seen their highs come and go.

Consider an ICO and how it works for a moment. They come up with a concept, produce whitepaper, website, and then sell the ICO in exchange for BTC or ETH. They raise $50 million on day one. On day two they need to sell the BTC or ETH in order to operate. That's caused a lot of sell pressure in the market. I think a lot of these ICO's are pushing the market south. The giant ETH debacle (flash-crash) may have been caused by a stupid ICO holder even. I haven't read a good analysis yet on who did it.

ICO's imho are going to cash out that $50 million or at least a large portion of it. And then they may think, hmm....we're rich on day one, why blow all this cash on development when they can spend $2 million to make it look like they tried and the rest on themselves.

But most of this market correction for the blue-chip cryptos has just created a buying opportunity. Again, this is something obvious to me and anyone paying real attention to the market.

These are all the blue-chip buys:

BTC
ETH
LTC

These are the secondary also-rans:

STEEM
ETC

And these are the high-risk:

IOTA
BITShares
Stratis
ByteCoin
Golem
Maid
SIA
Waves
Stellar Lumens

The high risk cryptos are a gamble but ones worth noting as potentials for high profit but also huge loss. They will be unpredictable as some will be losers.

The blue-chip set are going to continue to reach new highs even in 2017 and will surely bounce back. I've already called it as October for a big crypto month. That may seem really far away for some of you but it's not. What you buy today may be worth 10-50% more in 4 months and that's a great ROI. Even if this set recovers half of what it's dropped in 18 days you'll see a 10% return.

Oh, and the market may continue sliding for another week but my best guess is that it will stabilize by the first week of July and the majority of the bleeding has past.

Good read, but might want to add "Don't invest what you can't afford to loose" as always Yea, I know right? I saw the guy was closed and even searched on the ban list to check if he was there but then I read Omniscient's post and it was hilarious. Both of these investments turned out to be disastrous.

You want the valuation of anything be it a company, a blockchain or any other speculative investment to grow steadily, any big pump is bad for the business and that's the exact reason why Omniscient's been so critical of these investments, they were fine if you joined before the heavy pump for a quick profit, but they have to readjust because that growth isn't realistic. You can't expect your "thing" to increase in value 3-4 times in a short time span without anything that justifies it, it's Altcoin devs are making good decisions by pushing announcements. Stratis is a great example. They will have a release only when BTC price and globalmarketcap will be in a great situation for the price to increase (STRAT).

Their roadmap (Strat) was released way way before, so please... The roadmap of strat was released when it was like $0.1 or so.. So are you telling me they expected the total market to reach $120B and then to crash down to $93 B and then expect it to go up in July 2017 ? What the fuck are you talking about? They are not psychics. And regarding postponing the roadmap it wasn't because of anything related to price.. It was technical issues, re-read their official statement please.

Also what you are you talking about (which is not true) iis called pumping, and devs that do that aren't very smart. You want your coin to have natural growth, instead of growing in middle of a pump.

We have encountered unexpected delays in the implementation of Tumblebit that caused us to reshuffle our priorities and reprogram to deliver incremental milestones. We will expand more on this in the Tumblebit Tech Update below, but we want to give you an idea, of what to expect from this point on for the Breeze release schedule:

Full block SPV Wallet with BTC (and STRAT) (around end of June)

Full node Wallet (1-2 weeks)

POS on Testnet (1-2 weeks)

Tumblebit on Breeze + Masternode (min. 4 weeks)

Each stage requires that developers and business units are sufficiently satisfied with testing and audits of this bleeding edge technology, before moving on to the next stage

Either one of the two:

1- Either you are saying they are lying, and they are manipulating the market

2- Or you simply haven't read their update (Mostlikely)

Selling now while the profit is good and others aren't selling off is probably a wise decision. Most should be seeing the leveling off effect that's occurring right now. Once that phase is over the profit takers will hit and push cryptos down very heavily.

My suggestion...sell sell sell and buy on the downside. Nothing wrong with taking your 20% or more profit now and waiting to buy-in again after the fallout.

I know there will be disagreement but let's think with some common sense here. 400% in two months is huge. And not a lot of reason is behind it.

Best of luck to those who bravely hold.

I'm happy other alt coins are taking the spotlight such as ETH. This goes to show and prove we don't need these fucking banks.

Stratis is indeed a risky bet but i think it will all depend on how people will use this technology. As soon as enterprise industry will see the potential use it might pick up. They offer good support and lets be honest, .net is the corporate framework. You can do everything in STRATIS that SIA is doing and much more. Also I have seen the article explaining how blockchain can be used for provably fair gambling which i can see being implemented in near future.

Well STRATIS headquarters are in London and was originally an aim at UK businesses. Lots of good investors in UK and crypto is becoming popular. Some areas of London already have local coins they use for day to day business and shopping. I think investors will take into consideration that UK based crypto is safer to invest than some middle east developers from all over. No offense to anyone, it has nothing to do with the skill set, just the public opinion.

HODL.

Simply because a few DNM are going to be endorsing ZCash as well so you should see increase in value very shortly.

I believe a certain DNM is implementing for use 1st July.

Sell after the price has been inflated by it being added it

I hope no one panics seeing this post while we're retracing :P

This was expected. But we should not panic for btc and eth. They are for long term.. Do not sell for small profit.

Hold it for years. If you want maximum advantage.

I think the difference between now and 2017 is that now everyone has confidence that it will bounce back, and big people are involved, so it's most likely not going to be a repeat of 2017.

Tesseract.mk - November 26, 2020, 1:01 am

I'd buy as much BTC as you can, charts are looking awfully similar to how they were on Nov 7th 2017, the next month is gonna be terrifying.

If you are afraid but you are not selling that's a sign in itself.

If you're so worried about the valuation of alt coins, then look at the BTC dominance chart. No one is going to tell you exactly when to buy or sell.

<https://www.tradingview.com/symbols/CRYPTOCAP-BTC.D/>

Omniscient - April 23, 2021, 7:42 am

I sold 25% of my crypto's 2 days ago. :) Saved me thousands. But like many others, my portfolio lost about 20% of its value since then.

I think the Doge thing killed it. That hype crap just hurts the market. You have people pump but then when it dumps it hurts everyone.

This is just like January 2018. At least it feels like it. We won't really know for a couple months and how far we dip.

If you have profit now you can sell and hope market dips well enough to buy back in. Or you can hold, pray you have invested well, and wait for a market recovery.

In any scenario you have to make sure you've invested into the right technology. Not just hype. But strong blockchains with real usage.

I've continue to point out how many alts still haven't hit their ATH's. And yet ETH and BTC did, that tells you something.

btw, if you do plan to sell, suggest Dai for a stablecoin. It's decentralized unlike Tether, USDC, and Binance USD.

Overall this is a different market. I think it's not going to crash as hard as some think. BTC tanked to $3k from $20k. My guess is that we might test a $30k BTC if we dip under $40k. I don't see BTC dropping under $30k again.

Smart play is on BTC and ETH for long term. If you have a bunch of shitcoins, you might want to take a really hard look at them and consider how you'll feel if they lose 95% of their value or more which did happen the past few years to most of the alts.

The top 100 is barely recognizable to the 2017 pump. Most of the top 100 by market cap are completely new.

I think we're all going to be looking at our portfolios and doing some soul searching today.

Goku - April 23, 2021, 7:45 am

Everyone should have at least 50% of their portfolio in BTC. And for full-disclosure, I personally do not but that's because my income is in crypto and I need to use all my Bitcoin earnings for real-life bills. But trust me that I do have things set aside that ensure my future. :)

Just get BTC, hold and STFU. If you had 90% of your portfolio is Bitcoin, you'd not be giving a shit at all about a 30% market drop. That's just the facts.

Pretty much where I'm at right now. It's just the market doing its thing, it's a bunch of noise and randomness. The fundamentals will win in the end.

I'm convinced that 1-2 Bitcoin is all anyone will need in 10 years to secure their future. That should be the goal. Everything outside of that is just playing market games.

Sometimes he is ;) and yeah some times I don't agree with his opinions but most of the time they are pretty accurate, last time he made a thread about selling, he really opened my eyes, but I didn't sell immediately, I sold when I thought it was the perfect time and it worked out pretty well, some users sold immediately and they missed like 20% profits, someone else's opinions can really open your eyes some times but definitely you are the one that have to decide what to do, so everyone relax, just wanted to know his opinion, obviously I'm the one who will make my decisions but just wanted to hear more opinions.

And the reason I said the market looks "funny" is because in the past few days a lot of retail investors only wanted to buy pump and dump coins like Safemoon, DOGE, and like 50 other sh1t coins. That's not good for the market at all, but looks like that's slowly dying, hopefully we get a good bounce now.

Only you can answer that.

Personally im loading up on Radix and another coin. my holdings portfolio is 100% correlated to how much research and confidence I have in the project. If you want big gains than take a higher risk, but if you want safer gains than lower that %.
