My background;

I am in no way an expert in day trading cryptocurrencies and the stock market. I have made many mistakes and lost earnings and investments due to bad timing, impatience, aggression, lack of research and other factors that influence the market. In the grand scheme of things I am just a small time trader compared to for example, financial analysts who place orders on behalf of hedge funds and investment portfolios on an institutional level. If you make trades based on someone else's experience or advice in the event of a loss, the responsibility can only be beared by yourself. You are responsible for your investments and should endeavour to make sure you have all the necessary research and liability limitation as possible.

In my short time of trading, I have come across so many people who are new to trading – I was once one of those people who had no idea where to start. What is important is that you don't become one of the many tens of thousands of traders that exist who will not invest time into the learning curve and do not understand the positions they have bought or sold, who solely rely on those who are experienced and copy trades. This approach over time will result in a partial or total loss.

Setups;

Finding low risk entries requires finding low risk setups. Any good setup is an opportunity to get into a trade with as little risk as possible. For example; a setup rising $100 dollars, but has the potential to make $300 dollars is a 3:1 Profit/Loss ratio. A negative risk reward ratio would be risking $100 dollars to make $10 is a high risk setup, a profit/loss ratio of 1:0.1.

Hunting for Volume;

Our job as day traders is to hunt for volume and volatility. Volume is a key factor in causing movement or momentum in a stock or currency. In cryptocurrencies this means searching, planning and hunting for any type of catalyst that can cause movement.

Why do most traders fail;

Most traders fail because it requires them to make quick decisions and to have a very high level of discipline mentally and emotionally. For example, if we hear activist investors take a stake in amazon, initial reaction might be to buy the stock immediately, however, you need to be able to make a quick decision whether to buy or short a stock with discipline. In that moment you'd need to be able to make a decision to determine what price range, the size of your trade, risk tolerance and your strategy parameters. This requires multi-tasking under stress. You don't want to be in a scenario where you have to sell or buy but freeze up, looking at the keyboard not knowing what to do and hesitating, causing big mistakes or entering a position which is not worth the risk ratio.

Practising self control and discipline is something which has to be built up and maintained by exercising. Discipline always has to be worked on and is always developing and being refined. Getting complacent and thinking you know everything and don't need to look at anything around a trade is often met by a correction where you will lose money on a trade from complacency. Ultimately everything comes back to managing risk and all of the above are key components in managing your risk when trading.

How to find a setup;

Cryptocurrencies is different to the stock market in that finding trades isn't difficult. There are a limited amount of coins compared to the thousands of companies, commodities and securities listed on the stock market. You may understand the theory of trading, but the practical application may be more difficult than initially thought. Finding your perfect A1 setups for an entry along with vital risk management (risk tolerance – stop losses related to the size of your total equity, profit to loss ratio – whether or not the trade is worth the risk). If you end up trading 30-40 times per day, it is most likely that your setups are lacking accuracy, while the commission from your exchange or broker isn't as much as a ticket order on the stock market (between $7.5-$9.0 dollars basic), it can add up in commission fees. While your broker will love you, it is essentially you who are losing profit from taking a risk.

Got the same. He edited the post 3 hours after he post it.. Wouldn't be surprised if he changed the download link to a download to an exploited PDF document after some people vouched for the legit copy.. I wouldn't open this outside a VM.

Anyone willing to open it with WireShark to check if it drops anything? The download link from the OP is <https://www.file-upload.com/4jgrv65q2nss>, in case he changes it.

Don't be ridiculous.

I edited the thread because of typo's.

The download link has stayed the same. I'm not sure why you can't open it though. It's a PDF portfolio. Is your Adobe reader up to date?

update: there was an issue with 2 of the materials I had to remove the bookmarks and save as a PDF again. That seemed to have solved the combining issue and allowed me to complete, but most people have been able to open?

update: You must have adobe to open as it's multiple PDF's.

True.

Warning for lost post count, really?

We have 100x eBooks that are essentially scams, threads promoting just pure bullshit products.

And you still have the fucking time to go around and warn people for a low post count?

Really?

smokierobot - June 10, 2017, 6:59 am

Amazing guide, I really needed this.

These were charted days ago.

STRAT: Downward trend line on STRAT crossing with support at .25. We should see some movement here further downwards if mass selling occurs down to .23 and possibly .219 if that continues. It is selling off quiet hard, very similar to what happened with XRP.

upload images

DGB, charted and updated last night. Perfectly deflected off the resistance and will most likely go back down to the support, possibly further. Would be a good opportunity for those who want to attempt to scalp some profit starting from those two support levels.

Eth: Forecast Ethereum to 280/85 yesterday, pushing up to 290 and 300 today. With no dip at this level and continued growth, expect Eth to reach potentially 320/330 before a pullback as investors sell for profit. With this in mind, also factor in the squeeze on altcoins as Eth increases.

Tip: near half dollar and whole dollar marks, We often see rapid price increase as it is a healthy confirmation that stocks can break through those half and whole dollar price points

Ubiqu: This was mentioned by some professional traders today as being a potential platform that could have momentum similar to Ethereum. I will be watching this for a pullback for $2,000 buy position to hold till $10, hopefully soon. Current price $2.56. Beginning of June $0.50

A conservative Ethereum growth projection based on Current Growth Trends
This is an attempt to project Ethereum's growth rate based on technical information. Do not take this as guaranteed to happen. It is advisory information utilised to examine the levels Ethereum could reach if current growth continued at a fixed rate.

A Growth increase of 266% occurred for the past 30 days of trading on Ethereum, with some almost tripling their investments.

Based on current growth along with established pullbacks on Ethereum. I have tried to outline a projection for the next few months.

These are the projections based on the 1st of each month (Kraken Exchange Rates);

Beginning of July - $360

Beginning of August - $464*

Beginning of September - $659

Beginning of October - $749

*BTC fork potentially introduced beginning of August which represents big volume increase in Ethereum if capital moves from BTC.

At Ethereum's unpredictable exponential growth intra-day. These projections are a conservative estimate. Although in this time span, there are so many technical and fundamental factors such as good and bad news, announcements, issues with Eth and Eth mining difficulty increases that can affect Ethereum's growth and market confidence. I can't account for that, however that said. I think it's more than likely that Ethereum will increase beyond these initial price levels, but there is no evidence for this.
