Thread: Surpassed 110 Bands/Artists Seen Live

SUI-3183372 - June 11, 2017, 11:04 pm

I've been keeping a list of all the bands/artists/shows I've seen live, and if I counted openers I've never really heard of, I'd probably be nearing 200 seen, but I decided to just count the bands/artists/shows I actually know and went to see. Some of these are from festivals, I've been to Coachella 2 times, FYF 4 times, and Outside Lands once, but I'm still gonna count them.

My list:

A$AP Ferg (x2)

A$AP Rocky (x2)

A$AP Mob (x2)

Active Child

Aesop Rock

Albert Hammond Jr

Angels and Airwaves

Angel Olsen

Animal Collective

Lmao my #1 question is how is Lil B live?

Impressive list though, wide variety of genres I like that!

Pretty awesome.

A buddy of mine ran a team that threw underground parties throughout Los Angeles. They'd rent out random warehouses for a night in secretive areas and throw some of the most bad ass parties I've ever gone to. Lil B played a lot of them. They got Migos twice. Chief Keef and the Glory Boyz twice. One of the time Chief Keef played, the party hit capacity real quick. The people who couldn't get in ended up breaking down one of the walls of the warehouse to get in and riot police ended up showing up breaking things up. All in all, they're always some of the coolest shows I've gone to just because of how crazy they always get.

Doxicity - June 12, 2017, 12:53 pm

Patiently waiting for The Glitch Mob to make their way over to the east coast. Hopefully they finish their new setup and begin touring.

Lol was Dan Deacon any good, seeing him open for Bassnectar in September, and I only know of him from the drinking out of cups youtube video.

Dan Deacon isn't really anything special. He played an after party for Arcade Fire back in 2014. I wouldn't really ever pay to see him again, but if he's around, he's not bad.

Damn fam jealous af.

I have a buddy who works for an organization that throws kind of spur of the moment / pop up parties down in LA. Generally they'll just rent out a warehouse for a night and put together some really awesome shows. Lil B commonly performs, they've gotten Migos(circa 2011-2013) a few times, Glory Boyz (Keef, Reese, Santana) once, but that led to the warehouse getting destroyed and riot police getting called. Soulja Boy and Riff Raff did one of them, that was pretty hilarious, especially because Soulja was getting visibly upset that all anyone wanted to hear was Crank That.

I've honestly never given J Cole a chance. No idea if I'd be into him, will give him a listen now.

Interested in hearing your thoughts. I like a good amount of his stuff. Lights Please, No Role Modelz, Wet dreams, etc

Not one of your bands have I seen live and at most 2-3 that I would be willing to see. But I think I've been to more shows than you but of course I'm much older.

I'm working hard on catching up, it's my favorite way to spend my free time.

Tomorrow I'm off to see James Blake and KHUSHI then have nothing planned for the rest of March =\

Next month I have Karen O (of the Yeah Yeah Yeahs), Dangermouse, Hop Along, and Soccer Mommy on the schedule.

It's been an interesting progression over the years though, to see what concerts I was attending 10 years ago vs now. Over time we may see my taste change and some more names you're interested in popping up on the list. I also bet you could find some hidden gems in there too though, there's a fairly wide variety in there and some smaller LA based performers.

Honestly, I hadn't for years and years, and while I do normally wear earplugs now, it's clear that I've damaged my hearing a bit over the 7 or 8 years of not using ear protection.

I'm surprised you've seen Chief Keef live. Too bad you never got a chance to see Young Dolph perform.

Parks - September 26, 2022, 9:05 pm

Holy shit. That's a lot of concerts, do you wear hearing protection? I've been to one and then I had underwater hearing for a day lol

I used to have a buddy work for an organization called hamoneverything. I'm not totally sure what they did, but once or twice a month they'd rent out random warehouses through out Los Angeles and throw absolute bangers. Locations were always secret, so the crowd was smaller and only consisted of people who really wanted to party. And hamoneverything were renown for their ability to get killer performers to attend. Lil B was out half a dozen times, Chief Keef, Lil Reese, Migos before they were big, Soulja Boy, Riff Raff, this list goes on.

The night that we saw Chief Keef, the fact that he was there AND the location leaked online, so very quickly the warehouse was surrounded by people who wanted in. Eventually people on the outside tore down a wall and started pouring in and riot police came in shortly after. Think at most we got about 40 minutes of a Chief Keef set (which was still fucking awesome).

I have videos on an old hard drive somewhere that I should post of these parties, never seen anything else like them.

If I'm close to the stage or speakers, then I generally like to.

I've likely done some damage to my hearing, but all things considered my hearing is still in pretty good shape.

So you saw Anthony Green by himself? Not Saosin or Circa Survive?

Correct.

I'd much rather see him in either of those settings, but a girl I was dating at the time was super excited to see his solo stuff.

They would have been cool to see in their prime. Not sure how the 2010's have been to them.

Looks like Green has a new band that just debuted an album a song a few months ago: L.S. Dunes

Consists of Anthony Green, My Chemical Romance's Frank Iero, Coheed and Cambria's Travis Stever, and Thursday's Tim Payne and Tucker Rule.

I like(d) all of those bands :O

That sounds good but I'm not a big fan of artists branching out while existing in other places. It's just too much shit to follow. Anthony is really bad about that but I blame drugs and his band members cancelling tours because of relapses. Ironically Dallas GREEN is a similar case, I love AlexisonFire and one day in the grocery store I heard a song playing and I was like why tf is this so familiar but I never listen to this radio genre much, eventually it clicked and I googled it to confirm and it was a song by "City and Color" ie Dallas Greens solo stuff that's radio friendly.

I can mostly agree with that. Connor Oberst is another name that comes to mind who does this a lot.

I went through that same exact process when I first learned of City and Colour, but I enjoyed the slower acoustic stuff from him too. For the most part I've moved on from hardcore music. I'll still see an Every Time I Die show when they come up into town (They play at a super tiny venue and its always a good time) or attend Emo Nite out in LA, but its rare that I make it out to a good hardcore show anymore.

I don't listen to hardcore at all anymore besides a few of the new wave of screaming black dudes my favorite being Poorstacy .

I don't think I've heard any AFI since 2006's DECEMBERUNDERGROUND.

I was huge into AFI in the 90's and 2000's (their punk work is some of my all time favorite music (Days of the Phoenix, Totalimmortal)), but I started moving away from this genre a bit in the later half of the 2000's.

I'm really excited that they're mostly just doing Sing the Sorrow, will bring out maximum nostalgia.

I'm amazed that in your list of 114+ artists, I've heard of 5 of them. That's something beautiful about music, though -- the great diversity means that two people can listen to hundreds of artists each (probably more in your case if you've seen 100+ live!) and yet have minimal overlap in favorites.

I remember seeing a$ap mob. That was really something else and something we'll never get again. Ferg, rocky and schoolboy all in that era ?

RangoWorld - November 21, 2024, 12:46 am

Damn. That's a loooong list. I've only seen a handful of shows live.

I hope to rack my number up as well from now on.

SUI-3183372 - January 4, 2025, 3:35 pm

Underoath's 20th anniversary of They're Only Chasing Safety Tour

The most fun I've had at a concert in quite some time. Also my first time crowd surfing in over a decade probably.
