Obviously not pointing at any particular group or person because most add some value to the forum, but this is what happens when they're priced out for the normal members.

I reckon many of the first generation of groups probably surpassed this number as well. Regardless, it's still impressive in today's time and The Order was a pretty good group.

I think it was just surprising to newer members how a group could be so active with members who were close. But yeah, lots of past groups out there with plenty more activity. I think The Order was just refreshing to some.
