You list CSS3, HTML, Ajax, React, Angular and PDO as languages when they are not. Anyone who can rub two brain cells together when it comes to programming will tell you you are off your head.

HTML => markup language
Ajax => used for making XML-HTTP requests in JavaScript.
React => JS framework.
Angular => JS framework.
PDO => PHP extension.

Like what the fuck, that's like me saying "yeah bro, I code stdio.h".

Not everyone who can code in the core language can code in framework built upon the language, many competent C++ programmers I know cannot fathom the idea of a QObject.

Some people want additional work done on their existing project that's done in an existing framework, explicitly stating such framework is supported gives customers reassurance.
