I have some suspicion that this user also goes under the alias of another carder known on this website. I will be adding proof shortly.

Rip seems like a pretty big scam. i feel bad for you. but then again how was he able to send you cards that turned invalid after a day?

Amazon continuously checks to make sure the payment method is legit. So at first, the payment method was legit, however they soon after would have seen the real card owner file a charge back due to someone stealing their info, and at that point the account is locked.

Not true. The original buyer could still start a credit card dispute.

This is what you are basically saying:

"I'm sorry that you bought an illegally gathered gift card, but I still sent you the gift card."

You sold him the codes, You are responsible for what happens to them or else someone can just card codes sell them, then say the samething you are saying when something goes wrong, not saying these cards are carded.

You sold them, you are the only one at fault here not your friend who you bought them off of. Also, you stated in Discord it was eWhored and now saying you purchased off of a friend. Get your story straight.
