Thread: LOOKING FOR A MENTOR

Magi - July 1, 2017, 11:31 am

Hello fellow hackers.

I am looking for someone who is able to help me in my journey of hacking. I am not a total a beginner, as I have taken some online courses, but I am ready to take my skills to the next level.

PM me if you feel as though you can help.

Faith Connors - July 1, 2017, 11:36 am like what exactly are you willing to learn and stuff

give us some detail

(Jul 1, 2017 11:36 AM)Faith Connors Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) like what exactly are you willing to learn and stuff give us some detailSo currently I am particularly interested in RAT's. I have become fairly familiar with backdooring devices on the same network as me, but I would like to learn more about portforwarding, and accessing devices on other networks.

I am really open to learning anything. While I have exhausted beginner tatics of dumb things that get people into hacking (ex: using wifiphisher/fluxion to try and phish for locked wifi passwords) I am interested in interested in now learning more advanced techniques. Anything you have to offer is welcome what im implying is that ratting or portforwarding or whatever you mentioned isn't hacking. nor does it need mentorship. all it needs is a guide you found from google that's 5 years old and access to your router. yes, 5 years is fine because literally nothing has changed since then.

soo with that being said, what would you consider hacking? Cause I am also interested in learning about cracking passwords for gmail, facebook ect. But the people on here who I have talked to have told me gmail in particular is very hard to crack do you know what a segfault is do you have any programming knowledge

how do i find kernel32.dll using PEB

why is reflected xss highkey probably the most useless web vuln to find i guess my interpretation of "hacking" may be different to other people. but i can tell you that universally, just getting someone to download your file and using their computer to perform ddos attacks with cracked scripts that you don't even know what they do is not hacking. it never will be.

unskid yourself now. don't bother with rats.

popping a shell may help you in a pentest environment, but you don't really find any vulnerabilities that way, now do you.

i may be acting like a complete utter fucknut/asshole right now because im in an extremely shitty mood and im really not fucking having it today

but i can point to threads, posts, users whatever the fuck you want on here that i have helped out numerous times, and have never received a dime because i dont believe it should be charged for. i can point to other threads people have written to help people. look at true demon, he wrote a fucking BOOK. dont be so disabled to think 20$ is cheap for someone who just reads off a tutorial they found online and dont know how to troubleshoot, or they've never written a line of code in their life

I'm proficient in both java and python. In no way shape or form was I looking for someone to teach me to press buttons. I was just looking to grow my knowledge. I apologise if I have somehow offended someone by not knowing exactly what hacking is. This was supposed to be a post that helped me to find someone who could help me accomplish what I am trying to. Somehow it has turned into something completely different. I mentioned rats because it was what I had been looking into most recently. There's a reason this was posted in the beginner hacker section of the thread

Yes i have spent time here. Look at your post activity in any hacking section, then look at mine in this one. You are still a nonentity compared to me and many more.

Point to a single actual contribution on this site you have made relating to the hacking field (no sentry, sorry) like a guide or tutorial. You are still a nonentity.

And referring to the guide vs mentor in the other reply, are you capable of reading the Help Docs on logging out or do you need a mentor to help you with that one too?

EDIT: Oh, and if you're gonna attack me for liking anime (a more personal and unrelated attack,) trust me, I can do that too. People are allowed to have hobbies.

too bad booting isnt allowed here anymore even though all you were able to do was copy/paste a leaked script :)

And your guide of screenshots doesn't explain anything, especially since it's dutch.

You've lost this battle, be my first neg and move on.

Having money doesn't make you a hacker, unlike what you believe.

MOKA - July 2, 2017, 9:52 am

Tbh you need to learn everything not to actually do them but to understand how things work, Let's say ratting it helps you understand how a connection is opened from a victims computer to yours "Hacking" could mean alot of things there is no Facebook Hack like people say it's bullshit either infected or plain fake, What i'm trying to say is don't go for one genre of "Hacking" try to learn as much as you can to build you hacking skills.
