Thread: Open threads = top; closed threads = bottom

If you view "Your Threads" or if you want to view someone else threads like "Find All Threads" it will use the search function and display the threads and order them using last post date.

I suggest that it will still do that, but also sort by open and closed threads. If you have an open thread it is usually because it has a reason to be open, but if it is closed like a currency exchange that has been completed, it is often closed and could be tucked aside.

To be honest I don't mind the closed threads at all. Sometimes I do close a thread I plan to reopen shortly after, so having it go to the last page wouldn't be more convenient.

Define tucked aside though, I assume you mean moved to the bottom?

If you open the thread it will go back where the open threads are and be sorted by date.

And yes, meant moved to the bottom hehe.

Maybe some threads are there purely to be read so why push them down just because the original poster doesn't want comments (just an example)?

Yeah. Yeah. Not going to lie, that's true.

I have some threads like that myself. So I agree.
