Thread: Card idler/farmer on linux

Brain Gear - July 7, 2017, 11:20 am

As title, i am looking for a card idler that works on linux VPS.
Planning on using digital ocean since i still have some balance there.

Could anyone point me towards the right direction?
Thanks in advance ?

Your best bet for card farming would be idle master for linux (python):

https://github.com/jshackles/idle_master_py/archive/master.zip

For idling use SPKBot or an old version of steamhourboostv2.

But for card farming, see further: https://github.com/jshackles/idle_master_py/issues/18 and see the post by thekloun, he explains it perfectly.

Edit: I advise you test it on your own distrib of Linux to save you wasting money on a droplet, I used to use that but I'm not sure if it works anymore. If all fails I recommend you just buy a WinVPS and run Idle Master 24/7 low priority.

I can idle your accounts if you'd like. Free of charge, Just cannot have mobile auth on the accounts.
Contact me on the steam link bellow if you'd like.

Wasting money isn't such a problem so ill just try it out on a droplet.

Is it possible to run multiple accounts? Since i got 20 with over 600 games for card idling.

I'm looking to do it myself, thanks though.

I suppose yes, steamtimeidler runs one account per instance if you just screen 20 instances I doubt it would use more than 5% CPU (Depending on the droplet). At the end of the day, it's a python script.

ArchiSteamFarm can be used on Linux I believe, and seems to be the most popular way of idling/farming multiple steam accounts and has a load of different customization options.

One of the most notable things about Archi is the "Offline" mode that it supports which allows your accounts to appear offline while still upping the hours and card drops on the accounts being botted.

20 accounts with each over 450 games currently farming and works like a charm ?
