Thread: Trumps war on open internet

MyNFONulled - July 13, 2017, 8:24 am

The Trump administration served notice on Thursday that its next move to deregulate broadband internet service companies would be to jettison the Obama administration's net neutrality rules, which were intended to safeguard free expression online.

The net neutrality rules, approved by the Federal Communications Commission in 2015, aimed to preserve the open internet and ensure that it could not be divided into pay-to-play fast lanes for web and media companies that can afford it and slow lanes for everyone else.

Supporters of net neutrality have insisted the rules are necessary to protect equal access to content on the internet. Opponents said the rules unfairly subjected broadband internet suppliers like Verizon, AT&T, Comcast and Charter to utility-style regulation.

In a news conference, Sean Spicer, the White House spokesman, mentioned the net neutrality rules affecting telecommunications and cable internet services, noting that the Obama administration had "reclassified them as common carriers."

Nothing against you.

I like to see facts and base my thoughts and opinions off that.

Just because he has not seen proof on hack forums.net does not make it a "claim"

If he wants to be corrupt you can say "this could be a claim"

I don't think you understand. He can call it a claim, as you've not provided any evidence for this. A statement with nothing behind it is a claim.

If he wants to be corrupt you can say "this could be a claim" If you are assuming that I'm a corrupt individual, that is far from the truth.

I am a Hacktivist. Take it as you will. My goal is to stop this bullshit spreading of false information to the masses. I wanna see proof. Then after I see the proof from there I gather my own ideology off of it.

I simply asked where you read this from. No need to be hostile man.
