2 main ones that come to mind people seem to forget.

Don't buy ebooks.

Users don't vouch for methods making them money, they vouch for the user selling the method.

kiahnna - August 4, 2017, 6:03 am

Basically if you say a point that destroy an Uber's argument you get an automatic neg 3
If someone doesn't like you them and their friends are more then likely to pull a bukkake on your rep
If your rep is less then a hundred & your not a uber your word basically doesn't mean shit in the marketplace lol

Although, as an unwritten rule, it's apparantly very important not to piss off any members.

I understand how things work around here but if I was a Ub3r, I wouldn't care about some number on my own screen. Even as a normal member, stuff like that doesn't bother me. Quite honestly, negatively repping a normal member who is unable to touch you back is a below the belt kind of move unless if such rep is legitimate in terms of practical work points such as scamming. At least, that's what I think.

Selling Nootropic vitamins, which are 100% legal and can be purchased on Amazon violates the "deep web discussion" rule somehow.

But don't worry, selling e-cigarette juice that contains nicotine, a deadly addictive substance for adults 18+ only is allowed for some reason.
