Thread: Today I saved someones life \(I think\)

Sup, so interesting thing happened to me today, I think I just saved someones life.

So It's 1:20AM in the middle of the night driving on my way home from a party when I stopped at a red light. I was the only car on that boulevard except that there were like 20+ stray dogs right next to my car. They were just sitting there when suddenly a guy out of no where appears with his bicycle. Suddenly all of those dogs started barking and running toward him. Guy got scarred and started cycling faster. All of the dogs started running towards him.

So I made a U turn and started driving towards the dogs. I wanted to scare them but instead of running to the guy with the bike they started running towards my car. I didn't care as I am in my car, nothing they can do.

I was driving slow enough just so the dogs can keep up with my car and away from the guy. The dogs didn't look like they would attack since at one point I stopped my car and the dogs just stood there. After about a mile I made a U turn and quickly drove away from the dogs. They couldn't catch up with my car and probably continued on where I left them.

I met the guy after I got back and he thanked me. This is the first time in my life I ever done something like this and the first time to see this much stray dogs in one place.

Ripped apart by savage dogs with foul rotten smelling breath, what a way to go. Did they range in size?

Yes, especially eastern Europe. Usually stray dogs are not a problem here. We have agencies that pick them up, vaccinate, castrate them and they put a tag on their ear. All of the dogs as I've seen had tags on them.

Bro this is some The Grey type shit.

But seriously, good job helping him. Always feels nice helping someone who otherwise would be helpless.

Whoever rides a bike at 1am deserves to be bullied by some dogs lmfao
