

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: Messenger/facebook question

Moldypeach - September 4, 2017, 11:13 am

Ok, I got a question.

If I use someones facebook credentials to login on messenger, do they still get some kind of warning?

DeadKube - September 4, 2017, 11:16 am

Yes. You can always view where your account is being used and even the device.

Warnings are sometimes given out if you're logging in somewhere other than the known devices of the person (or if you're using a VPN).

Moldypeach - September 4, 2017, 11:19 am

So messenger depends on what login security options you activated on your facebook settings page?

(Sep 4, 2017 11:16 AM)DeadKube Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) Yes. You can always view where your account is being used and even the device.

Warnings are sometimes given out if you're logging in somewhere other than the known devices of the person (or if you're using a VPN).

hi_man - September 4, 2017, 11:20 am your IP is noted down and sent via email (if email notification are on) otherwise it is marked in the logged in devices.

Moldypeach - September 4, 2017, 11:22 am

I turned off the login warning of that account.

So only the logged in device will be a problem...fuck

Better to login straight to facebook than.

(Sep 4, 2017 11:20 AM)hi_man Wrote: [\[CITE\]](#) your IP is noted down and sent via email (if email notification are on) otherwise it is marked in the logged in devices.