Thread: New members being accepted in groups.

Outlaw. - September 13, 2017, 4:43 pm

Hello everyone.

I'm a fairly new member with lots of hopes to be an important contributor of HF.

I recently saw a thread in this section made by a guy that was new himself, at first I thought he was kidding saying to myself he wouldn't get accepted because of his minimal ammount of posts. (He barely had 20 posts [I am not intending to offend anyone, as I have a low quantity of posts too])

I had a big surprise face when I saw he was getting advice from group members and even invitations to join them.

Now, my question is: Could I get accepted into a group too?

I'm a high school student with not too many abilities, but I'm open to learn everything I can; I have a passion for gaming and technology and I also like a lot cinematography. I joined here because I knew this was the only forum that could provide a great community, a beautiful and organized design and a lot of valuable information to get in use.

That's my profile, if someone thinks I could be an useful member for his group, please don't hesitate to send me an invitation ?

Thank you all for reading my thread! ?

Of course you could be. As long as the recruitment doesn't specify a specific account age, you have a shot of making it.

Good luck.

There is nothing stopping you from applying to any of the groups listed by Froggy above. Go to the recruitment threads and fill out the application forms.

Good luck and keep an eye out on this subforum for future recruitments and new groups. You can also check out the Chat Invites like Discord, Tinychat, or Skype Section if you're interested in joining off-site chats with other members.

Account age is a factor that gets me out of range from many groups, but Dawn is perfect for my needs, it doesn't have any requirements and it is a very nice and helpful one.

Idiots like you don't deserve my time, I'll just ignore you.

All of your questions should be answered by reading our recruitment thread. If not, you are welcome to ask questions there.

Usually you can get invites if people like you enough.

Or apply via the UserCP; It gets the leaders all worked up.

If you stand out, have your own good qualities and are not afraid to voice your opinion then you are certainly going to get accepted in many groups.

Most of the members are faced with two choices.

a) Give up on yourself. Give up on what you are, give up on any form of subjective opinion. From that point on, your favorite word will be "high quality" and it will be a word you love more than anything in your life. Perks? You are HQ, everyone wants to be as cool as you and you have 80% less posts than the average HF member because you will only post in two cases: When someone is breaking/questioning/discussing the rules and when you have some HQ content to share. You will be able to join HQ groups that have HQ members in them and you will find a group of users that are just like you so you can have even more prestige by grouping with other similar users.

b) You can stay you. You get to joke. You get to share and appreciate memes. You get to be a LQM as much as you want. You don't get judged because of it, you are always LQ and people are used to you being LQ. What does LQM mean? Low Quality Member is someone who did not embark on the A path that I mentioned above. Most of the HQ groups would never accept a member like you. You get to appreciate the community, openly curse eBook sellers and they don't even get mad because you are just a LQ mem(e)be(a)r.
