Anybody who applies seriously with a positive attitude and puts some effort in his application have a good chance of being accepted. Noted your application, good luck!

Good luck to everyone who enters!

That thread got nothing to do with this one. And no, I will take my time to review every application and investigate each applicant, so yes you have a chance of being accepted.

Thanks for replying to me and explaining that. I noticed that other thread and it made me concerned. I'm sorry if I've caused an inconvenience. As you can tell, I'm new around here and I had a bit of a misunderstanding. I feel bad now for not only potentially confusing other individuals, but also I should have put more effort into my application. I only put a few sentences for each of those text boxes and one of my answers was pretty lame. Any who, my attitude is actually quite positive due to being very optimistic, but my gloomy answers probably don't show that well.

I see this argument getting pulled a lot and going by logic let me speak a word or two.

What does your membership status mean to them? Nothing, absolutely nothing.

Do they have a reason to deny someone good because they are not a l33t/ub3r member? Nope. They don't gain anything by accepting upgraded members and denying non-upgraded members, which should be a good answer to your implications. By writing such a post you probably are looking to evoke some feeling of guilt in the examiners and soften their heart so you could increase your odds of getting accepted.

What matters is your quality. What matters is what you can bring to the group. Your addition to the group should be backed by your profile, your contributions to the community, your personality, activity and reputation in the community.

Anyways, congratulations to the members that got accepted into the Influence. ?

We have a lot of skilled people applying in and I must say I'm a proud member of the family.

Can't really speak in the name of other sectors within the group, but if you're a graphic artist and want to improve, we have rotating courses and assignments for you! Keep the applications going!
