If you paid for English lessons, then whoever it was definitely did scam you.

But I agree with most other users here when saying I do believe you dealt with an imposter. You should include images of your conversation also.

I have noticed on the screenshot of the profile page it has "Rate" Next to the reputation of Mr. Robot. Dead Giveaway. When you view your own profile you can not see that piece of reputation because you can not rate yourself.

Obviously don't disclose that you were paying for a hacking job, but I'm sure you wouldn't have anyway. Simply tell them that you were buying an online item from a forum member and he never delivered. Regardless of how it was sent they should side with you.

It's a clear inspect element on his real name, not only that but if he was Mr Robot it wouldn't show him as offline if he was taking the picture lol.

I hope you get this solved with PayPal, best of luck.

Also you can tell them that you sent money to the wrong email and would like a refund.

Hope one of these helps, and with you the best luck resolving this.

Mr. Robot - September 28, 2017, 5:28 pm

Nope not me, sorry dude - that skype has been used for a long ass time and always pops up in deal disputes.

robot.hf@protonmail.com isn't me either in that image, also if you look closely at that image - it says I was offline at the time, to take a picture of your own profile, it will say you are viewing yourself.

The middle tab also shows this thread, so could be one of the people who posted on there

You should definitively not be scared.

HE is the the one that is scared right now probably because you posted the dispute, don't worry.

Well that means he has seen the dispute thread so now he's trying to coerce you into closing the dispute to try and take focus away from him.

There are plenty of people here who would do some detective work to figure out which member did this but sadly it happens so often that many remain out there.

The best advice was already given to you as far as trying to get your money back, as for your future dealings on HF, you need to be more careful, look into anything that doesn't seem right, regardless if it seems insignificant at the time.

The best way to at least know you are dealing with the correct person is to ONLY DEAL OVER HF PM.

Hm I tried reverse searching his email he used on paypal and tried to see which information I could get from that (Found some pictures and some other stuff). One of the sites I used gave me a name of a relative and a picture of him which was blurred, I then searched for the relative on FB then searched under her FB friends and found him - I'm not that good at doing this kind of stuff though.

This is all the information I got right now as most of those sites wants me to pay to get more information.
