Thread: Vegas Shooting Thoughts?

xxDr3aMz - October 2, 2017, 7:16 am

First off regardless of what happened. rip to the victims and prayers to their families.. Now lets get onto the facts. 50 killed 400+ injured? I want to hear everyones thoughts on this, opinions ect.. We know it was a fully auto gun, their saying he had wooden planks set up, cameras in the halls ect. Ok so thought 1 is maybe a 64 year old guy was ready to go.. felt some type of way and went crazy.. thought 2. 450 rounds atleast? I mean we know he missed shots so easily 500 rounds. 64 year old guy shooting that man rounds fully auto? how about government set up more then one shooter, I mean a 64 year old guy no family no friends.. they said he commited suicide? looks good don't it? gun control? or just another crazy son of a bitch.. COMMENT.

lwristz - October 2, 2017, 7:18 am

It was a really tragic event. I'm not sure what more needs to be said except may those victims Rest In Peace. Maybe the shooter wanted attention given his age? Well, he certainly got it. :(

Feel so bad for the victims' friends and families.

awwwwww and there it is! there is the fucking answer right!? just what the whole thing was meant to do. put people in fear and strip our gun rights. now as into changing the rules I agree In certain cases.. (states) I live in NY. it is hard enough to get a gun here. as far as texas and other similar states I agree.

Some of the states are so ridiculous with their gun laws... Who needs to be able to have a fully auto rifle...? Thats absurd. It's no wonder their mass shootings are so big. If he had a semi auto rifle, that could only fit 5 round magazines, and had to go through background checks, many people would be alive today (those are canadian laws).

Nothing will change though, some of those power thirsty americans (whom I'm sure are upset at the horrific event) still feel the need to have their weapons. For whatever reason, they can't link the two together.

"Power thirsty Americans" because they value their inherent rights? Interesting concept there bud.

Agreed that certain weapons aren't necessary; although, automatic rifles aren't legal in the first place so your argument is literally proving the point people are making AGAINST gun control. He obtained the weapon illegally, the gun laws doesn't change that fact.

It doesn't matter what or how many things you do to try and prevent these things from happening. Even with heavy regulations, people are still going to find a way to obtain illegal weapons, such as the fully automatic guns used in this case.

Sure, firearms are obtainable illegally, but there must be a difference between criminals obtaining arms illegally, and terrorists(as in this case) doing so. I mean really, how would a crazy 64 year old man get a fully automatic rifle illegally? He would be scammed or mugged even by attempting to do so, is my guess. Very certain that he used legal weapons.

I absolutely hate reading about shootings. I wish everyone got along. It's so saddening to see innocent people die. These shootings are becoming more and more prevalent. We need to put ourselves in the shooters shoes to see what they are going through so we can help them. They are mentally not okay. The rate that I see shootings happen scares me to go to any big public events. Chicago, LA, NYC, Los Angelus...list goes on.

I really don't see how in any way one would think to do a mass shooting. Is there traits we should look for in people that are common among many shooters so we can catch them early on?

This is just horrible.

That may be the case with guns that can be legally purchased and have to be registered, but this is a completely different situation once you involve the words "fully automatic."

Fully automatic weapons were "technically" banned after the Firearms Owners' Protection Act of 1986 which prevents anyone from owning or selling machine guns with the capability to fire continuous rounds. You're telling me someone with no military connections at all had access to these types of weapons? Regulations or taking away people's guns won't do jack squat if you're just going to take away guns that are legally obtained because people one way or another are still going to get them on the black market illegally.

People talking about all the conspiracy shit should really get a fucking beating already.

How would any government possibly gain anything from shooting up innocent people?

It's fucking ridiculous, and disrespectful aswell, Just fuck off, seriously.

Anyway, another shooting in America. We got ISIS, they got insane people that can buy guns as if they are a bottle of orange juice. The only thing America can do to avoid such things is making weapons illegal (oh I sense a lot of hate incoming, since I am saying such a weird thing. No weapons? No more massacres??!!). If you think your "freedom" requires you to have a gun aswell since you are a free man, then you must have some mental difficulties.

How many shootings does it take before you realize that those guns bring more evil than good? How would guns even have any positive influence? And don't even start about the "crooks will get guns

illegally!"-crap. Like some psychopathic 64 year old guy could get his hands on 10 automatic rifles as if they were some fucking candy if you'd actually ban weapons. No, better keep them legal, and wait for the next psycho to get in a bad mood, pick up a gun at the local gunstore and shoot up a crowd.

Let's see how many massacres it takes before people realize it.

How would any government possibly gain anything from shooting up innocent people?

It's fucking ridiculous, and disrespectful aswell, Just fuck off, seriously.

Anyway, another shooting in America. We got ISIS, they got insane people that can buy guns as if they are a bottle of orange juice. The only thing America can do to avoid such things is making weapons illegal (oh I sense a lot of hate incoming, since I am saying such a weird thing. No weapons? No more massacres??!!). If you think your "freedom" requires you to have a gun aswell since you are a free man, then you must have some mental difficulties.

How many shootings does it take before you realize that those guns bring more evil than good? How would guns even have any positive influence? And don't even start about the "crooks will get guns illegally!"-crap. Like some psychopathic 64 year old guy could get his hands on 10 automatic rifles as if they were some fucking candy if you'd actually ban weapons. No, better keep them legal, and wait for the next psycho to get in a bad mood, pick up a gun at the local gunstore and shoot up a crowd.

How about you look up a list of conspiracy theories that turned out to be true whereby the US government killed its own citizens? Start with the Manhattan plutonium experiments in which the US government aided in injecting and killed hundreds of unsuspecting patients with plutonium. Or how about Operation Northwoods whereby the US gov had plans to blow up US planes containing school children?

Some of us have independent minds and don't like to swallow the first story we're told by the media.

The thing is that in America people aren't even scared to get a gun anymore. It's not like they have to plan shooting up a crowd or anything. It can be something they did at a whim, maybe they mentally went out of control on some drugs or whatever and in their psychotic state thought about shooting up something.

Whatever it is, if they have a gun next to them, that will make things fairly easy. And if they don't have a gun, can't easily get a gun, and know having a gun will have serious consequences when caught, maybe it would lead to less people buying guns or actually even thinking about buying guns?

Guess what? You cannot do a shooting without a fucking gun.

I really cannot comprehend why every American feels the need of having a gun so much. Does the rest of the world need guns to be safe? How many shootings are they getting yearly in the USA compared to the rest of the world? How many times has it been pointed out that a massacre could've been avoided weren't it that the gunman could buy a gun like a PS4 game?

Do you guys want your kids to grow up where everyone (including all the madmen around) are walking around armed, ready to shoot?

In the country I live in, when you go to city at night, you will meet a lot of strange people and lunatics often aswell. If those could freely buy a gun at the corner of the street, then I don't think I'd let my family go outside.

But hey, who am I. We obviously need guns to.. Protect ourselves from others holding guns. The only thing we can do to stop gun violence is producing more guns. Everyone needs a gun. Kids will come to school armed with a glock aswell soon, to fend off possible school shooters?

Yes, I also live in a country(Swe) where guns are heavily restricted and those who own them are being inspected and monitored. This means that no one except tin foils feel the need to protect

I think a lot of sensible conspiracy theorists are actually quite earnest individuals that care about the victims more than most, they dedicate their time seeking the truth and try to bring genuine justice where it's needed. America pledged to never forget 9/11, and many families of the victims are not happy with the information they received, and the only ones actively trying to help those families out left in the dark appears to be the conspiracy theorists, everyone else just wants to tell people to shut up about it and ignore questions that may appear dumb, but dumb questions can sometimes lead to intelligent discoveries.

I agree one should have to have a substantial amount of good evidence to back up their claims, but to silence people for their views no matter how outrageous is to only shoot yourself in the foot, you could be denying yourself an ounce of truth from what they have to say. Sure it does, but that doesn't take away the fact that most people get tired of people trying to make massacres into some mini game, finding out the possible conspiracy in everything they hear and letting everyone know.

I am not silencing anyone, I am just saying that I find it pathetic that instead of mourning the victims and feeling with them and their families, people try to sound clever by mentioning retarded conspiracy theories with no ground to set foot at.

In the end, we can be 99,99% sure that it was just another lunatic killing people, so unless you got any proper evidence, please accept it or keep it for yourself, the people who lost their families and loved ones aren't waiting to hear that "it was a conspiracy" first thing in the mornin' afterwards.

Because guns are legal in America which means that nobody will look at you for having a gun with you (I guess, since I don't know the exact gun laws, is there a difference between hand guns and machine guns or whatever?).

However, if he took them to the hotel in a couple of times (I am sure you can hide them in a suitcase or bag), then it would be fairly easy.

He could've probably done it at once in a big bag aswell, nobody would suspect something like this... If you see someone with a big bag, the last thing you will worry about is him carrying a fucking arsenal of machine rifles lmao

I know but still, those types of guns don't just fit into luggage, I mean I guess it's possible if he disassembled the guns and reassembled them later but that doesn't seem entirely logical.

However, if he took them to the hotel in a couple of times (I am sure you can hide them in a suitcase or bag), then it would be fairly easy.

He could've probably done it at once in a big bag aswell, nobody would suspect something like this... If you see someone with a big bag, the last thing you will worry about is him carrying a fucking arsenal of machine rifles lmao he had heavy duty weaponry, stuff you need permits for. He didn't walk around with them open because no one does that and he would've been stopped.

Indeed, in that case, he would've been stopped. But still, if you're planning to massacre people, then the last thing you will have trouble with is getting the weapons into a hotel. It's not like a hotel is the most tight security place on earth. He could literally put them in his car and take one with him everytime he came back to his room. It's not like a hotel constantly keeps track of every guest, anyway. I think assuming that I'd say they'll have difficulty tracking it back to the source tbh. There are some regulations on weapons; although, there could be a tighter leash. With that being said, I definitely don't agree with removing all weapons.

"Shooter bought guns legally, early reports indicate From CNN's Evan Perez:

Shooter Stephen Paddock had purchased multiple firearms in the past — he bought several in California, a law enforcement official told CNN. But those don't appear to be among the 10 or more found in the Mandalay Bay hotel room.

So far, investigators believe the firearms were purchased legally.

The suspicion, based on initial reports, is that any of the rifles used were altered in order to function as an automatic weapon, the official said. Among the weapons found so far are a .223 caliber and a .308 caliber."

There would be reports of him being an ex-vet if he was by now, it's probably one of the first things they look at when making the early investigation. The only thing that stops a bad guy with a gun is a good guy with a gun.

Criminals by definition disregard the law.

So if you think banning firearms from being owned by civilians will reduce firearm violence then please explain the logic behind how.

I stopped reading at page 6, so much incorrect information about firearms and the legality of “fully automatic “ firearms...

Yes you can (in most states) own them, ever hear of the NFA stamp?

There are hoops you have to jump through and they aren't cheap, but you can legally own them.

You don't get the point. There COULD'VE been a situation where a good guy with a gun could've stopped the bad guy with a gun, but if no good guys have guns, then the chance is 0.

If guns are banned from good guys, then the bad guys can obtain them illegally anyways, it makes no sense. Not to mention that people could just use trucks & bombs like they've previously demonstrated.

Sweden is not America.

I can see what you're trying to say, however you are comparing a lunatic shooting up people at a festival with organised terrorism, or even war crimes (referring to the slaughter during the Syrian civil war). I don't think those things can be compared. Also, we all know that obviously, Arabic countries are much worse than the USA, since there are bloody and violent revolutions going on there as we speak. I don't think you can even slightly compare these things all together.

Indeed, you can still kill without guns. But by that logic, should we have people legally buy tanks and whatever they'd like? Since they can kill anyway, we should allow them to have an arsenal of weaponry? There is no logic in this argument. If you search for a list of shootings in the USA, you will be astonished. <http://prntscr.com/gsgunt>

About the arguments with the cars, I don't think I have to seriously answer that since we both know that's just complete nonsense.

And about the French off-duty cops: those are cops. They aren't just your average citizen holding a gun. They have been trained, know how to use it, and they know when to use it. They are solely the protectors of our safety and public order. Having them wear guns was a precaution to be able to fend off any possible new terrorists, obviously a security measure needed at that time.

Also, once again, this was not about some lunatic. (Well, in the end, they obviously are lunatics, but you can understand what I am aiming at). The Paris attacks were a big organised terrorist attack. I don't think you can compare terrorist attacks and war crimes to the shootings happening in the USA.

Indeed, you might be right that forbidding guns will be very hard if not impossible. That doesn't mean that it should continue like the current situation, though. Atleast make it difficult to buy a gun, put up mental tests before giving someone a gun, etc.

In Europe, people like cops have guns, but also people that have gotten a permit may own a gun to shoot at the shooting range etc.

This is in my opinion the best possible solution.

I think a hand pistol at home would possibly be justifiable, but that is the absolute max. No rifles etc. And if you get caught with a gun on you outside of your own property, you should get a 2 year jail and a criminal record.

If you put up harsh rules, you will eventually make sure people keep it out of their head.

"Homicide using firearms"

I do not think suicide counts as homicide.

If you look at the amount of homicides (in which the USA already outshines most countries by a factor of 15) and compare the relation between homicides with a firearm and without one in the USA and the other countries, you can see a way, way bigger % of the homicides in the USA committed is done using firearms.

I agree with this even though I don't live in america myself. Since the foundation of the US there have been guns, mainly because of the 2nd amendment. Back then there was an actual need to bear arms to protect yourself and since that law stuck it's much too late to change anything now.

The way I see it is this. The reality is that there are a shit ton of guns in the US, and the criminals will not just stop having them if actual gun control was enforced. If anything the good people wouldn't be able to protect their property anymore against the criminals that will still have guns.

Right now a criminal will think twice about robbing a store because if the owner has a gun ready he will get shot. If gun control was to be enforced the store owner would lose his licensed gun and the criminal wouldn't think twice about robbing the store with his unlicensed gun because there's almost no chance of the store owner actually having a gun to defend themselves with.

Whenever these things happen it's either one of two controversies.

1) Conservatives start bitching about Islam, refugees, and immigrants. They always automatically assume it's somebody from one of those backgrounds.

2) If it's a white shooter, the controversy turns to gun control.

Why can't people understand that a tragedy like this was not very preventable. Things happen, it's not possible to predict. It's happened, and will happen again. Just mourn the victims, and do everything you can to help their families and those who survived.

I personally don't think banning weapons would do jack shit. If anything it would make it worse. Why? because most of the guns used in attacks like this are BANNED anyways. If all guns were banned the only guns obtainable would be full auto deadly weapons on the black market. That means any future attacks not only will people be unable to protect themselves with their own weapons, but they would be getting attacked by a full auto gun rather than a pistol with limited rounds.

Even if gun control laws come out, the only thing that it's going to prevent is people being able to protect themselves.

Criminals will always find a way to get weapons, the government is simply taking away self defense for citizens which gives them more control.

I agree that stricter gun control could be implemented when it comes to fully automatic weapons such as the one used in the horrible events that went down in Vegas.

What I meant to get across in my original post was that it's too late to actually implement a version of gun control where all guns are taken away to your every day joe. (Which is not equal to a gun ban)

If their plan is successful state of Nevada will pass a law in the future making all casinos have mandatory metal detectors and backscatter machines.

Soon after a federal law will be passed to put these machines in universities, high schools, federal buildings, you name it.

Osi systems and Chertoff are the main producers of these machines. Sometime around 2020 Chertoff and Osi will merge into a single company.

After they merge the owners will sell off all their stock and make billions in profit. Mr Chertoff has been in contact with Sheldon Adelson.

Mr Adelson will become a huge sponsor of these machines and he will be the first to put them in his casinos when the law passes.

This is my last message for now. Don't expect me to return anytime soon

What happened in this tragedy was not a bombing. It was a shooting. With guns. Over 10 of them. You don't know the killer's motive. You don't know if he wanted to kill with a grenade or a knife. The fact was he killed with guns. That's the way it played out. People kill people. People with guns kill people. People with bombs kill people. People with AIDS kill people. People with mental issues kill people.

It was apparent this individual didn't have any prior medical history that would state he was mentally ill. He just had guns. A lot of them. He probably had wet dreams about guns and operating them. Today, he did.

The logic of some people here...

There will always be a way to kill people. So, lets completely legalize all arms and whatever weapons, since we can kill using a ballpointer.

Cars actually have a positive influence overall. Guns? Guns only harm people.

If you are going to come up with arguments like the terror attacks in Paris then you are just a fool. You cannot compare this to a well planned terrorist attack done by an extremist group.

Does the amount of times an individual has shot and killed/injured a potential bad guy in self defence outweigh the amount of people that get killed by accidental, homicidal or mass shootings like these? Who knows, but I'm guessing not.

Quote:But by that logic, should we have people legally buy tanks and whatever they'd like?

I'd be okay with that. In USA you can own a tank but it has to be disarmed.

Quote:Indeed, you might be right that forbidding guns will be very hard if not impossible. That doesn't mean that it should continue like the current situation, though.

Sure it's enough reason. Why disable an American freedom that's in the Bill of Rights under our Constitution if it's not going to be effective in preventing deaths?

Quote:In Europe, people like cops have guns, but also people that have gotten a permit may own a gun to shoot at the shooting range etc.

And it's similar here and varies state by state. In Nevada I had to get approved at both the Federal and state level to buy my guns and waited 3 days. And to conceal-carry I have to do another class for the permit. But in Nevada you may open carry in most places but we are never allowed to bring a gun into any casino even if concealed with a permit. I believe only police officers and military can bring concealed weapons into a casino.

A cop friend was at the concert. He was not allowed to bring his firearm inside while off-duty. We do have laws here. The laws don't stop criminals. Our jails are filled with people that weren't stopped by the law, only incarcerated. If you start to restrict guns you'll just have more convictions of people who want to have their freedoms the same way we jailed millions in the drug war.

Quote:If you put up harsh rules, you will eventually make sure people keep it out of their head. That's what they did with drugs too. Same mentality. They thought if they just made the penalties severe no one would break the law. WRONG. More people who should have gone to treatment instead got 10 years in a jail for having a few vials of crack.

I do agree mass shootings are a problem.

It does matter, you brought it up that you get that feeling and you think it's a false statement.

I'm trying to ask you to find out for yourself if that statement is true or not.

Firearms are used to commit tragic violent crimes.

However so are hammers, bats, pipes, cars, planes, knives and anything else you want to think of.

Blaming a firearm for a murder, regardless if it's a mass murder or a single death is illogical.

The problem is the people, either education, better background checks or tougher sentences.

Again will it stop mass murders, no, the vast majority of people who commit mass shootings are expecting to either commit suicide or suicide by cop so thought sentences won't help against that.

You cannot 100% prevent this type of thing by simply removing the tool, you need to deal with the root cause which is finding the signs of problems before they happen.

Something like this could be prevented, you can't tell me that this 64yo has had this planned since he was born, there must have been some sort of signs of change in his life over the last few years that someone could have questioned...

There's no benefit to making firearms illegal. Honestly, the most realistic thing to do is increase taxes/base price and lower supply. For guns that make it to an illegal market through a legal sale, this is going to decrease supply, and make them more expensive. Like Omni said, people kill people, and mass shootings are going to happen; however, if weapons of stronger impact are too expensive those will be saved for the cartels and people with more power than this man alone. More illegal purchases will be lesser caliber and strength. No matter the situation or theories surrounding this event, if he didn't have an automatic rifle, less harm would have been done.

It's our right and freedom, but I would say there's a healthy gray area, honestly. There are regulations, and there's nothing wrong with protecting yourself and your family. But there are changes that need to be made regarding security, sales, and regulation.

I will say that though by definition this isn't an act of terrorism, I do think this should be under a classification of such. Regardless of the ideals and motivation this person had, he committed mass murder on American soil for a reason he saw fit in his head. That to me is an act of domestic terrorism.

I won't make any comments on the conspiracy out of respect to those injured, but I will say the videos of the shooters brother were very odd in nature and production and I recommend watching them.

They aren't as strict as you think, there are 3 main classes of "firearms", Prohibited, restricted and non restricted.

Restricted and non restricted licenses are relatively easy to obtain, the strict "side of things" is the transportation of restricted firearms.

For starters, I doubt at a concert like that, they allowed firearms in the vicinity. Another thing, if they did have firearms, they sure as hell didn't have anything big enough to shoot at the 32th floor of a hotel building.

Terrorist attacks can come in so many forms. Tragic, but shootings is one. No hate, but I don't see how strict gun laws would change anything in the US.

Government Takes our Guns -> Terrorist attacks by Bombs -> Government somehow stops bombings -> Terrorist Attacks by Cars -> Government takes our cars -> Terrorist Attacks by Stabbing -> Government takes our knives -> Cyber Terrorism -> Government takes our internet

See what I mean? Nothing will change the fact that terrorist attacks will happen. Guns or no guns. I would rather have a gun to defend myself in these scenarios.

Technically, Automatic firearms are not banned. You just have to go through an intense process of obtaining said firearm legally. You also don't have to go through the process if you were a cop or in the military.

I think I could say the same thing back to you Drizzy.

I agree gun laws will never change the out come of a terrorist attack like this.

Sad to hear something like that is happening...

Making it harder to get guns would not help in my opinion.

If someone wants a special gun, he will get it!

It should simply be better monitored. Weapons do not kill people, people kill people...

I will preface this with, I am unclear about the different state laws.

Fully automatic firearms to the best of my knowledge fall under the NFA laws, similarly to suppressors.

They are obtainable legally with the proper taxes paid and checks done.

They are also quite expensive compared to a semi-automatic version of the same firearm, this not as common.

What does the shooter being 64 years old have to do with anything? Do you think they're incapable of shooting a gun at that age? Believe it or not, older men with "gun collections" have a majority of rifles of all sorts, not just hand guns. But of course you have to be that one to come up with some stupid conspiracy theory and blame everything else but the culprit. If any mentally unstable person wants to shoot a crowd of thousands of people, they will. Politics and religion isn't the answer to everything.

"So far, at least one has been identified as an AK-47 type rifle, outfitted with a stand to steady it and improve accuracy, said people close to the ongoing probe. Lombardo said the weapons that have been recovered range in caliber from .223, which is associated with AR-15 style rifles, and .308, which is a caliber commonly used in hunting rifles. Lombardo was unsure if any of the weapons were automatic. Scopes were also recovered on the scene, and at least one firearm was a handgun."

I haven't looked into what exact models but yes you can legally own fully automatic firearms in Nevada.

Quote: Gun owners in Nevada don't need a permit to buy or possess a rifle, shotgun or handgun, according to the National Rifle Association. They can carry a firearm openly in public. Nevadans can even purchase machine guns or silencers, banned in other states, as long as they're legally registered and within federal compliance. The state does not prohibit possession of assault weapons, 50-caliber rifles or large-capacity ammunition magazines, according to the NRA.

It's said they were converted to fully automatic.

"Las Vegas gunman Stephen Paddock bought more than 30 weapons and had 23 firearms in his hotel room as he carried out the deadliest mass shooting in U.S. history, Fox News learned Monday.

The deadly cache included converted, fully automatic AR-15 style assault rifles with high capacity magazines, according to a law enforcement source. The weaponry suggests Paddock passed numerous FBI background checks.

Police said late Monday they recovered 23 firearms from Paddock's hotel room. Weapons found were both .308 and .223 caliber, Fox News has learned."

"The .223 is known as a typical AR-15 round and is common in small game hunting. The .308 is a heavy, long range bullet, meant for big game like elk and black bears. It is commonly used in an AR-10 rifle.

Fully automatic weapons are illegal, but machinists can convert them. "

Places (certain states) that have some of the highest gun control laws also have the highest violent crime rates with guns. There is no evidence that stricter gun laws in the USA work to curb violence or crime.

The 2015 Paris attacks had 137 killed and France has stricter gun laws.

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/November_2015_Paris_attacks

https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gun_laws_in_France

Criminals will get guns. Murderers will kill even without a gun.

The #1 killing weapon in America is never being asked to be banned. That's cars.

Gun deaths in 2015 = 13,286

Vehicle deaths in 2015 = 35,092

Just wondering how you can compare car deaths to gun deaths when most of the deaths caused by cars are unintentional? And as for the French gun regulation it's not as stringent on immigrants of which committed those atrocities. Also, we're discussing mass shootings not general crime, so your comment about the states with high gun control is a little off topic, and the regulation is nowhere near as strict in those states as it is in places like Australia.

Hopefully you can clear these points up.

Thoughts on this? Stephen Paddock was an undercover FBI agent who participated in multiple illegal arms deals in the Las Vegas area in a gun running entrapment scheme, similar to "Operation Fast and Furious" Read here:
https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/ATF_gunwalking_scandal

And he was not there to kill anyone. Paddock thought he was engaging in another routine arms transfer, but ISIS had learned about the entrapment scheme and Paddock's true identity. They killed him and carried out the massacre and then fled the scene. FBI is embarrassed and will definitely not tell the true story about this.

Though, I believe Paddock was setup by his handlers (people in higher power) and they told the buyers "ISIS" to kill Paddock and carry out a massacre, because of the gun control agenda, related to the New World Order agenda.

This theory could almost be true, just one problem. ISIS ALWAYS CLAIMS THEIR ATTACKS! They would want the world to know that ISIS was the one to lead this huge attack. There is no way ISIS was involved and as much as everybody hates that it was a white guy, it's the truth.

Stephen Paddock was an undercover FBI agent who participated in multiple illegal arms deals in the Las Vegas area in a gun running entrapment scheme, similar to "Operation Fast and Furious" Read here: https://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/ATF_gunwalking_scandal

And he was not there to kill anyone. Paddock thought he was engaging in another routine arms transfer, but ISIS had learned about the entrapment scheme and Paddock's true identity. They killed him and carried out the massacre and then fled the scene. FBI is embarrassed and will definitely not tell the true story about this.

Though, I believe Paddock was setup by his handlers (people in higher power) and they told the buyers "ISIS" to kill Paddock and carry out a massacre, because of the gun control agenda, related to the New World Order agenda.

I think you're reaching a lot. Conspiracy theories provide comfort of familiarity in times of obscurity. Paddock was a man that saw the immortality that came with being a mass shooter. A whole Wikipedia page and your name in history like Lanza.

What needs to change in mass shootings is how the media portrays it all. Of course we want to know why the shooter did it, his motives and all, but theres no reason to write remember name in history, all it proves to future shooters is that killing masses of people will be the only way to get attention and "live forever".

It could be true, not just almost. But I mean, ISIS is basically USA/Israel. So I mean, the white guy is behind ISIS. Does it matter what race it is? Really?

It's just a theory - not saying it's the truth. But is it possible? Yes.

I am no conspiracy theorist or anything and are normally against them, but I still find it hard to believe there was only 1 shooter due to the fact that in the initial videos when the shots start ringing out, you can hear shots start at a higher pitch then more right after they start and in a lower pitch. I also ran across an interesting post on Facebook that also is believed to show there was a second shooter on the 12-13th floor as multiple angles show what could be muzzle flashes as the shots are going off. If I could have a "theory," there was a second shooter and with there being more than one, it was used as a distraction so the other could continue to carry out the shooting and be able to flee.

Almost like your friend taking the blame for the drugs you knew about in your car when you get pulled over.

What these videos and let me know your thoughts:

Being old or young has nothing to do with how many people they can shoot/kill...

Devastated to hear of the horrific tragedy in Las Vegas. My heart is with the victims and families. Grateful to the responders at the scene.
