Thread: Saving up for a house.

Mr. Robot - October 7, 2017, 4:13 am

So my previous house didn't work out, some shit went down with mold and faulty wiring so i'm saving up for a new place.

Thought you might want to follow along so you can start saving too. My wife and I have decided this time we want to buy a house that's ready to be moved - so that gives us the option of houses like this

<http://www.warmanhomes.ca/property-item/1128-1725-mt-averill/>

Spoiler (Click to View)

Or a house where someone has decided they wish to build their own place.

That particular house that's ready to move costs '$131,110' and houses that are RTM (older places) are usually around '$30,000' to '$50,000'.

A bit of land for these places in a decent area enough for that size house, you are looking at a ball park range of '$20,000' to '$100,000' again on top.

That gives a max total of around '$231,110' CAD (basing it off CAD) and around '$46,222' deposit for a home loan/mortgage of 20% deposit.

If you work out the minimum, and really do some research you can get that down to even '$50,000' CAD which could get you a house for '$10,000' deposit.

Taking into account the interest rate, that would be at the lowest around $110 a fortnight mortgage ($55 a week) while at the higher end being $507 a fortnight ($253.5 a week)

*This is all based on a 30 year mortgage and around 7% interest P.A.

I've talked quite a bit with the bank lately and my goal is to save up for my particular setup /house/land/ which works out to $110,000 CAD and my deposit works out to $17,554.97 (i'll be going for $20k)

This will ultimately make my rent go from $480 USD a week from what is now to $96.41 USD a week.

I am currently starting this 'challenge' at $0 and will keep it all in a single bitcoin address until the goal is achieved.

This might take some time.

This is officially starting today.

My current balance is $551.76 / $20,000 - I can't show proof of this obviously because Eagle 95 is being a fucking cuck but I will post it back up here soon.

Works out to be around $238 a day into this address/or monthly deposits in depending on for 84 days if I want this goal by new years.

Once I have my new house sorted - I will be saving close to $350 USD a week just from paying a mortgage as opposed to rent. I PROMISE - here and now, I will donate half of that every week for 3 months to people on HF.

For anyone seriously curious about this - check this site out in particular. While only in Australia right now, it will put you on the right path. Look at all the images/sizes and look at how much a bit of land would cost in your local area. Otherwise check the spoiler for 2 images of one place that is 3 bedrooms for around $40,000 USD

Houses in the United States/Canada seemed rather big when I did a bit of research...

Is it just you and your partner? Or do you have kids, pets, ect....
I hope you're not paying over $100,000 for that property though.

N/A to the situation but when it comes to how much for a particular property, the one I have lined up if I can get it before the end of January is a 4 bedroom fully modern box house with 3 bathrooms. It's a really decent place.

You asked for $200 donations in your sig for a mattress. Me and many others remember it lol.

As I said, just curious. Do you not have a stable enough and successful career to pay for it normally, like other people? You should do, especially at your age.

Yeah that was what I had organized last year, get a house and drop my rent by 75%, giving that extra cash back would be awesome. I'd suggest looking at buying a house and land separate as it's far cheaper from what I have seen.

I'm not going to say no, but seriously if you have any jobs or whatever just hit me up. I'm not bothered to work for it even a few dollars.

In regards to the other user I replied to above this (not TopKekeroni) - A better example of modular homes here.

<http://i-build.com.au/3-bedroom-house-plans/>

Around $50,000 AUD to $100,000 AUD for anywhere from 1 bedroom to 5 bedrooms or go for a granny flat.

That's between $39,000 USD to $78,000 USD.

By the time you add on cost of land, over where I am it can be between $10,000 and $100,000 AUD ($7800 USD to $78,000 USD) depending on the size of land you want and located - plus local cost of drainlayers (which I am licensed for) and other small costs - The max you would be looking at is $156,000 USD.

20% deposit on an amount that size is $31,200 USD while the smaller end being $46800 total cost and 20% deposit of $9360.

So yes it's entirely possible and I am approved to do so with the banks on a deposit.

Because the house we are currently living in is owned by someone else, hence it being rent we pay. The house I dealt with previously was completely fucked and cost us money to be demolished.

I've worked in mortgage lending for a few years and one thing I can recommend is to NOT buy a manufactured/modular home. We do work with them for purchase/refinance but it's a major PITA. Their value depreciates so quick, interest rates are higher, they suck all around.
