hello everybody. there is something weird happened to me the other day, i was on the call with my girlfriend. suddenly the call was put on hold, i cut the call and called her back. 2 minutes later her nephew came from the other room with his phone on speaker and he could hear everything we were talking about. i cut the call and i saw notification from skype that it was a group call. her nephew is also in my skype. i didn't make that group call nither did my girlfriend. He did something. i don't know what can anyone help me understand how did he do it? coz if an 11 years old can hack and listen someones skype call then anyone can do it sir, does her nephew ever got access to your laptop?

Spoiler (Click to View)Also consider that you might have added him by accident to the call.

I asked if he had access to your laptop, or to hers? I mean it's very unlikely that a 11 year old found an exploit for Skype lol haha exactly, i was thinking the same thing. but thats the thing, he never had access to my laptop, or hers either.

i forgot to mention, on the group call it said my gf initiated that call. but she had no idea. so i am just confused.....

Alright maybe someone else has another idea but you might have been infected, it's rather unlikely because people who spread for fun (I did it for a long time too lol) usually don't do that.

Anyways, I recommend to both of you to download malwarebytes and to scan your computers. She should also change the password on the OS in case the nephew after all really is a cybercriminal lol

If something weird happens again, make a thread in the white hat section.
