I started trading on big stocks, and little by little i start trading other stock, bond and index. Then i moved to derivatives (securized warrant & options) and futures. I also traded OTC pink shee and at the end i moved to CFD and Forex. I prefer Daytrading instead of long time position.

i started forex with 3 other friends all on baby pips all relatively around the same time. At this current moment 1 has switched to stocks i think hes holding amazon and a few other things idk but another friend switched to cryptos around 2015, right before the huge rise of BTC he was accumulating BTC through not so ethical means which this forum actually sparked that interest for him, anyway he saw all his BTC value skyrocket and he just started applying what he learned in FX to that, and the last friend kinda stopped but he was an algo trader who quit because his robots wouldnt stay profitable long enough and he got tired of creating new bots for the ever changing market environments. And myself i still trade FX i had to take a small break and withdraw my whole account out of my broker but ive been slowly re-funding an account. my point is you can pick anything and if you really understand what you're learning you can apply your knowledge to any market. also trading isnt for everyone. example my algo friend.
