This seems like a nice project. Will be checking it out in morning.

Are you offering any bug bounties OP?

Charger - October 16, 2017, 4:33 pm

Please redo your categories.

Simplify them instead of having Xbox, Gaming, FIFA, etc.

Thank you for your interest in CoinMall. We do not yet have an official bug bounty program set up yet, however will soon.

If anyone discovers anything in the meantime, they can send us an email with their findings and we'll deal with it accordingly (compensation included).

'Gaming' is the main category, with 'Xbox', 'FIFA' etc being the subcategories. This makes it easier to browse the categories and search for specific products.

We're in the process of optimizing UI and layout so it's easier to understand.

Wow, website looks very nice. Was it programmed by you?

Although I'm a bit confused to as how I create my own service?

TheIoTGeneral - October 16, 2017, 6:48 pm

I really like the design. Well done!

Hey there. We're a team of four who created CoinMall.

As for creating a service: we'll have a guide up tomorrow to explain how to start selling, I'll post it on this thread for your convenience :)

Sort of. Bitify is quite a basic, non-scalable Wordpress site with an auction theme whereas CoinMall is a fully-fledged, custom built marketplace.

Due to this, Bitify doesn't have and can't have the features and experience CoinMall offers.

We indeed don't have fees. No other marketplace (or file selling platform for that matter) doesn't have fees.

Some of you may wonder what the difference is between CoinMall and OpenBazaar. We have released a blog post explaining the difference between the two and make a case on how CoinMall differs itself from, and is better than, OpenBazaar:

"Worlds first" ... dude, are you kidding me?

There are better places for a good cryptocurrency marketplace than the clearnet. From a privacy and anonymity standpoint, it's also not the best place. Although, pointing out the fact that a lot of regular, non tech-savvy average joes are buying BTC this may be a great idea...but there are already many sites offering the same exact concept. Your articles all state you are a custom built full fledged marketplace. Where is your API? Where is your source? Integration documentation? Bug tracking?

If you build a "custom marketplace" and don't offer ways to integrate with other tools (or even go open source) how do you expect to survive on the clearnet?

Throwing away all the other reasons why someone may not want to use the clearnet for dealing with bitcoin, did you know that the svg writing you are doing on your homepage can also help deanonymize users?

What i'm trying to say is, if you build a marketplace on the clearnet for bitcoin transactions...you should try to make it as legit as possible and get the average joe user. Your current model will fail on the clearnet.

Not sure why your talking about the deep web when it's literally to sell digital/physical goods and convert into a digital currency that you want.

If you use bitcoin as a way to purchase goods anonymously, or you BELIEVE that using bitcoin can help facilitate that, then what I'm saying is that on the clearnet that is simply never going to be the case.

If you want a thriving clearnet community for bitcoin transactions:

- a.) that already exists in the open source community
- b.) many of those platforms allow for 3rd party integration for ease of use

You cannot sell any items that infringe or violate any intellectual property rights or contravene any applicable international, federal, state or local law or regulation.

Is cracked accounts included but not limited to PSN, [censored], ExpressVPN, Domino's and others illegal? Domino's has a point system so it's not carding etc.

I'm not too sure on this, but if a product is allowed to be listed on HackForums, then it's OK to list it on CoinMall as well.

Good to hear! We'll soon offer a way to import products from other platforms (including Selly) for seller's convenience.
