Thread: [\[animals\]Kill or dont kill](#)

a323109 - October 21, 2017, 8:58 am

Years ago i started to have a couple of rabbits, 1 male and 1 female. In the beggining their "children" died. So i asked local farmers why. There said to me that there is no way one can raise rabbits without giving them drugs ecc...

I did not gave anithing but grass, at some point they started to no longer die ?
Now i have 12 animals.

Should i kill about 6 of them and eat them???

Personally i have no problem to kill animals,

Don't kill them and eat them. Unless you are poor and can't afford food.

Well its livestock.

If you get too many, try to give them away or sell them.

Either way if you don't have relations to them anyway, might as well go the other way.

I try, it is not that easy to make a clean kill. I've killed 2 of them and I was able to transform them into eatable meat.

Now I have 15 animals, I simply put grass into this home made feeder:
I've sold about 10 of them, only 2 killed and eaten.

Years ago the baby rabbits easily died I don't know why, but now they don't die anymore. That is good because it means they are stronger now.

It's the same as buying meat from the store.

If you see them as pets, you cannot really eat them.

But if they are just 'livestock' its pretty normal toe at them.

To keep them alive it is a matter of 10 minutes of daily work only.

The video show the 4 minutes download into the feeder. Another 6 minutes to load the truck and that's it. Plus some fresh water time to time. They dont drink a lot.

Problem now is overpopulation, they are multiplying themselves. I am thinking to extract some money too from this activity if possible.

A quick and humane way to kill a rabbit is Spoiler \(Click to View\) simply to take a solid piece of wood and give it a blow to the back of the head, or to hold it by the waist, swing it towards a sturdy piece of wood such as a tree so that it hits his head. You can also search other methods.

a323109 - October 25, 2018, 9:03 am

Not painless. Not my fault either. Now the fence is upgraded. I started this activity with little experience. I remember my father had rabbits about 40 years ago. We ate them. They were inside small cages. Now my rabbits are almost free...they can run, jump and hide underground into caves they made by themselves.

CyberStrike - October 25, 2018, 9:05 am

Rabbit tastes good, if a bit gamey, though I doubt that home-raised rabbits would be anywhere near as gamey as wild ones.

If you need to get rid of a few, sell them if you can, or if you need some money, or if you're too terrified of blood or killing to get it done.

But the meat sure is tasty, and the furs are so damn soft if you know how to tan 'em. Rabbit fur makes some of the best damn lining ever.

Eating your pet rabbits is somewhat weird... but I guess i'm not gonna judge.

There could be an argument made that thinning a population is good for the betterment of the overall population and future offspring. A large "herd" of them will thin the grass, draw more predators, etc.

a323109 - October 12, 2019, 6:15 am

Yesterday i killed one of them. 5 of them are outside the fence, well 3 now. One was eaten by a fox probably.

3 rabbits went to my aunt's garden. The rabbits inside the fence have children, the little rabbits go away, outside but the do not go any long distance, they stay here around eating grass.

My aunt has chickens and the little rabbit eat the chicken's food, therefore she asked me to pull away the rabbits. There were 3: one very big. She wanted the big one out at least. We tried to take it, but it was too fast.

I took my crossbow, put an hunting tip and bang! Got it in the heart. The rabbit died in a matter of 1 second, i have never seen such a fast dead. Then i have slaughtered the rabbit. it is enough easy, with a sharpened knife.

I gave it to my aunt, she is going to cook it and eat.

I am planning to kill all the outside rabbits, when they will be enough big. And gave them to people here around for free.

They multiply exponentially that is the problem. I started with 2 animals: one male and one female of course. In the first 2 years they did children but their children die soon. No one new rabbit survived. I was told that it would be impossible to have new little rabbits without some drugs.

After 3 years they stopped to die, they do not die anymore thus i am going to be full of animals.

Rabbits in Australia - Wikipedia

Quote:The rabbits were extremely prolific creatures and spread rapidly across the southern parts of the country. Australia had ideal conditions for a rabbit population explosion. With mild winters, rabbits were able to breed the entire year. With widespread farming, areas that might otherwise have been scrub or woodlands were instead turned into vast areas with low vegetation, creating ideal habitats for rabbits.

In a classic example of unintended consequences, rabbits had become so prevalent within ten years of their introduction in 1859 that two million could be shot or trapped annually without having any noticeable effect on the population. It was the fastest spread ever recorded of any mammal anywhere in the world. Today, rabbits are entrenched in the southern and central areas of the country, with scattered populations in the northern deserts.

I am not in australia but it can happen here as well

Giving them away would be viable. Better than the other options.

Ombra - April 26, 2020, 2:57 am

Killing them isn't an issue, but people from Countries that do not eat rabbits / love animals will certainly tell you not to do so.

imho if you're able to get them cleaned/cooked after killing, you're fine doing so.

Hero - April 26, 2020, 3:22 am

If you are going to kill them, do it in a way that is painless for the rabbit and don't do it in front of the other rabbits mate. Maybe some kind of electric bolt which they use to kill pigs instantly. Probaly the most humane way.

I agree with this - minimise the suffering would be the most humane way

Break their neck, that's how it has always been done. Cook it with mustard, and boom a delicious meal.

shitmaster - April 26, 2020, 5:31 am

I'd say eat them if you are not attached to them. My grandparents used to keep rabbits, chickens, and turkeys as livestock. It's not wrong or unethical to eat them. Just make sure you kill them fast and don't let them suffer.

If you make them suffer, it'll fall under animal abuse.

a323109 - June 14, 2020, 1:32 am

To control the rabbit population i thought to make a new fence.

Bought metal bar

Cut them as needed

Drilled some holes...a lot of holes...

Welding...a lot of welding...

Engineering the whole thing

[Video: <https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=TWUAH9f8eY4>]

Preparing cables and such

Install them

Put the web, double web

Create a lock from scratch

Total spent 150 euros and i don't know how many man hours.

Now i will be able to divide female rabbits from male rabbits ? therefore i will control their population. They reproduce when i want and not when they want. most of all, no more need to kill because of overpopulation.

Any thoughts about this madness???

That's entirely up to you on what you do with your rabbits. Personally, I would probably see if there's anyone I know who might want a pet rabbit or something like that, rather than killing and eating them. Just the idea of rabbit meat isn't something I view as being tasteful, but that's just me.
