Thread: Crashed my car again. Car suggestions?

False King - October 30, 2017, 3:42 am

So last friday, when standing still, the person behind me didn't hit the breaks in time, and hit us from behind. Now as the car wasn't worth that much anyways, it's probably a total loss and I'll need a new one. Not going for Peugeot anymore. This is the second one this year I crashed (well, this time it wasn't my fault, at least).

RIP second Peugeot: <https://imgur.com/a/103Kv>

I have a tight budget, so for sure it needs to be a second hand car. Budget is around 2000 euros. Any suggestions for a new car? I'm from the Netherlands, so that eliminates some possibilities.

Thankfully you smashed a Peugeot up (GOOD MAN) now buy something decent like a German wip lol make a tiny upgrade

i myself own this fiat multipla and it has been functioning quite well. i recommend it to anyone if you just travel with more than one person.

Spoiler \(Click to View\)

it really is a cool car overall.

It'd be cool if my nan was driving it, not a man in his 20's. ?

Focus, Polo, Golf, (Maybe not this) Corsa, Astra and a clio are all little handy cars.

dont buy no fords at all (would rather walk than push 1) no vauxhalls at all (As they are Renaults underneith) id recomend a passat b5.5 1.9 PD130 6speed, big silly cars and not all that to look at but it will have everything you can think of with bullet proof reliability and in uk can buy one from as little as £250

Planning on doing so, good to see others advice this as well.

Currently looking at some Polo and Golf cars, drove a Polo last Saturday to try it out, however it was an older model (1998) and drove like shit imo. So if I'm going for a Polo/Golf, it's a newer one.

I suggest a tank with the way you are going through cars, then if someone hits ya you won't even know. Glad to see you are okay. The Sandero looks pretty cool, amd while I have not driven one it seems affordable and decent.
