What if I told you, I had an exploit to see anyones online history listed here
<https://myactivity.google.com/myactivity>

Full unfiltered access for any email you can think of.

Would you be concerned?

Vittorio - November 16, 2017, 3:21 pm

I'm I would be concerned if you don't sell this to me

Hapi - November 16, 2017, 3:22 pm

Personally, I use DDG so I wouldn't be too concerned. If it's true, then it would be worth a lot.

If I ran a bot against millions of emails I could make a database search site.

BTW just for disclosure I have recently googled up "Uncontrollable farting cancer?"

But being serious people would be quite eager to steal it from you, and if you had it more than likely it is worth a great deal of money. Also it maybe a hole left in by Google for the NSA/CIA ..etc Either way just make sure you make your money off of it. If you report it or sell it make sure you are being paid.

It depends on on how easily accessible that data is.

If easy, it's a serious exploit because Google drives through data so you can steal and resell that data for lots of money.

Wouldn't be concerned tbh, i watch porn like any other male on the planet and other than that my history is pretty boring tbf.

eskimo1 - November 19, 2017, 10:29 am

Would I be concerned? No. If someone told me that they had such a thing i would assume they're lying. Especially on hackforums. You often hear similiar stuff - people saying "I got yo ip i will ddos you".

I would also assume that if such an exploit existed the author would be smart enough not to brag about it online for the fear of the hole being found by someone else and closed.

That said, it's only a "what if". What if I had a lazer gun, would you be concerned? What if I had a super hack to hack any PC in the world, would you be concerned? What if I could perform real magic, would you be concerned? It all depends. Do I wanna cause harm with it? Same applies for the above - would I be concerned if a hackforum guy got his hand on something can could potentially be turned into a weapon? Kind of, some people here have questionable morale. But luckily these people are usually pretty unintelligent aswell, so they simply wont get their hands on something like this.

Regards
