

Forum:Hack Forums

Thread: [Gmail hacked \[Security verification Unusual location warning\]](#)

cestmoi - November 21, 2017, 6:42 am

Hello there folks!! first of all it is a pleasure to be here with all of you; becoming part of this great board. Now on with my doubt and confusion. We could say I am an absolute beginner on this hacking world. And my knowledges only come from a few xploitz in the past and recent. reason I am here is because in the last I would say 1 year I've noticed something very funny, but at the same time very frustrated. Ok let me explain:

I get or use a valid working xploitz that sends the "faked" Gmail page, once I send this xploitz to my other Gmail account I click on the link and Bingo! automatically sends the pw to the password find page of the page I use. So everything seems amazing and great! but....hold on a second, once I have my pw and I go say to a different location..could be a cafeteria, or my gfs house and I try to log in guess what? Mr. Gmail account pops you up with a nice sweet message that states; it seems you're signing in from a different unusual location, please verify your account by tap yes on your phone. What does this mean? means if you had got the email pw Gmail from someone else and try to log in, it will not let you unless you tap that YES message sent to your phone or let them have you send you a code.

Now this shit doesn't happen with Outlook its funny. My question is, is there any freakin way to avoid or surpass this option?

Not sure if anyone has done or deal with this issue.

Many thanks buddies ?

SIM-3684208 - November 21, 2017, 9:28 am

Nope. If you have put your phone number with your gmail I don't think that there is a way to remove it. Maybe instead you could put up a recovery email? Not too sure on this but everyone has this problem. Good luck

Elitas - November 21, 2017, 9:31 am

Not unless you have access to their phone, lol.