Quote:Absolutely not. That includes posts, PMS, profiles, or signature, and while we can't verify if you're doing this via IM services, it's likely if on site evidence is presented to us, you'll be banned. We consider any hints, tips, or off-handed comments such as "+rep is appreciated" or "I like reps" to be an obvious hint to trade reps with a member. We won't tolerate it. If a user asks you for rep, report it to an Admin immediately. If it is discovered you didn't do this, you subject to penalty such as an account closure.

Sounds like a no it seems like.

He isn't asking for rep, he's asking for someone to remove the neutral rep on him.

Don't think this is against the rules IMO. He isn't asking for positive reputation.

yes u can ask someone to resolve there issues with you which in return will adjust the rep.

Deany - December 7, 2017, 8:52 pm

YES you're allowed to ask to resolve bad rep with other users.

Yes.

If an upgraded member leaves you a neutral/negative rep, you are allowed to ask them to change it to a positive rep.

You just can't ask for +/- rep from members who have never even repped you before.

You cannot ask someone to make it into a +3 etc. But you can ask them to resolve. It's pretty simple.

Which is pretty much saying "please turn that neutral into a positive."

Your interpretation of that is incorrect. You can ask someone to change the rep on you but you cannot ask to change it to positive as that's asking for reputation.
