Thread: Gaming Parents - Your thoughts?

I'm wondering if any of your parents are into gaming? I'm not talking candy crush addicts, I'm talking real E-Sports or competitive gamesi.

My dad has always been into gaming, he played Counter strike from 2001 - 2010. Then he explored League Of Legends and played that from 2011 till 2017. He now quited LoL and went back to CS:GO. He even plays these games with his friends he met in highschool.

Today was his 48th Bday and I gave him skins as present, this really made me wonder if anyone else has parents who are into gaming.

Let me know guys, I'm very curious!

Only games my dad enjoys are the NES Mario games and Contra. Other than that, he doesn't play anything.

My dad enjoys playing first-shooter. He loves the oldskool COD's.

Cool, thanks for sharing your experiences. I'm really wondering if our generation will still be gaming when we'll be older.

I think its great. Always get people using the "you're too old to play games, get a life" bullshit. If it's something you enjoy then go for it, no point going through life avoiding what you like.

Look up the CSGO team, Silver Snipers. Think the oldest team member is 80 something years old.

My dad likes to tell me story's of him and my mum working to complete the very first Doom! Although no gaming for either of them these days. I did manage to get my Mum to PLayer Dead Winter and Catan board games with me and my sisters though :)

Lol my dad is the same. He plays the old COD games where they aren't futuristic. He was better than me at playing too.
