What is this?

This is a lead paragraph. You can use it to highlight your main point before your article. It is great for such usage.

Questions questions questions

1. "Blazing fast speeds". 100Mb or 1Gb? I have IPVanish at the moment and it is shocking for lag
2. Multi devices. Does this mean I can use the VPN on more than one in my home? I have a Windows HTPC that I would like to add to my existing IPTV on my android box. This doesn't cost any more?

3. Is the android version a plug and play app? I do I have to keep updating it?
4. Windows. How is this achieved? Never done a VPN on Windows before.
I don't see any instructions. Or do you provide a help with the set up?

I would go after the lifetime if this was the case.

I would go after the lifetime if this was the case.1. We have both 1Gb/s servers and 100mb/s servers

2. This is correct.
3. You'll have to use a 3rd party program but it will work just fine !
4. We will provide full support if needed but it's simply just a download.

What does Port Forwarding mean? Can I use port 25? will I be able to verify emails?

Goodbye123123 - March 3, 2018, 8:41 pm

Yes you will. You can unblock any ports on our VPNs.

apt-get money - March 6, 2018, 5:25 am

To give you some quick feedback on your website and sales post: Please stop using clichés when you're explaining technical features. I was very disappointed and wrongly informed after visiting.

'Blazing fast' > How fast?
'Multiple Devices' > Which devices? How many at the same time?
'Fast support' > 1 hour? 2 Hours? 24 Hours? 7 days?

Hey mate, it works great but I have a question about the port forwarding. I opened a port and it asks for my internal ip so I entered the internal ip from my normal router, right? Anyway after opening the port "succesfully" and I go to canyouseeme.org , it tells me the port is not open. Am I doing something wrong or does it not work properly?
